Summary of the link

Specificity of the natural environment

The geographical area of the 'Collines Rhodaniennes' protected geographical indication occupies a prime position within the Rhône-Alpes region. In a varied landscape of hills, forests and cultivated land, the view extends over the Rhône Valley and the Pilat Natural Park. To the east, the landscape opens out towards the Alps and the Jura Mountains, enjoying southern influences from the Drôme and the Ardèche.

It is a vast territory, covering the cantons of the south of the Loire (Gier Valley) and Rhône departments, the part of the Isère department known as the Isère Rhodanienne, and the north of the Drôme and Ardèche departments. The geography of the area is relatively simple, however, as it follows the course of the River Rhône, which is lined with hills on either side.

Geology and soils

The geological events that have occurred over time in this northern part of the Rhône Valley have resulted in an extremely varied topography. The rather flat alluvial plains of the River Rhône are flanked by very steep slopes and small plateaux. Vineyards – which may have very little space – are present throughout the area.

Granite soils predominate in this territory. Soils resulting from the weathering of metamorphic, leptynite, anatexite and gneiss rocks can also be found. These soils are characterised by the presence of minerals such as quartz and black and white mica. They have a strong heat storage capacity, which helps the grapes to ripen.

There are also stony layers on the gentle slopes of the hills and stony clay-limestone soils in the valley.

Climate

The climate is semi-continental, with alternating influences of the Mediterranean (Drôme, Ardèche), continental and oceanic climates. Winters are quite harsh, with heavy frosts at times and sporadic snowfall. To the west, the mountainous terrain has a notable influence and temperatures are cooler. Summers are hot and sunny. There are frequent winds, including the Mistral, a fierce, cold, dry northerly wind. Fierce southerly winds, on the other hand, herald the arrival of bad weather from the south-west. This meridional (north-south) wind regime is due to the alignment of the Rhône Valley and the mountains to the west (Massif Central) and east (the Alps), which funnel the wind into the valley. Rainfall is regular, although storms can be frequent in summer.

One of the specific features of the vineyards in the geographical area is that they are essentially monovarietal in nature.

The red wines are made mainly from the Syrah N, Gamay N and Merlot N varieties. The white wines are made mainly from the Roussanne B, Marsanne B and Viognier B varieties. These vineyards also include heritage varieties, which, although local and ancient, are well suited to changes in the climate and market expectations. These varieties can be used to produce monovarietal wines or in blends. They are the varieties Arvine B, Bia B, Châtus N, Chouchillon B, Dureza N, Mornen N, Robin N, Roussette d'Ayze B and Sérénèze N.

Causal link

The link between wines with the 'Collines Rhodaniennes' PGI and their geographical area is based on the selection of varieties, which are mostly of regional origin and well suited to the soil and climate conditions of the River Rhône and are used to produce monovarietal wines. These varieties, which are grown in their preferred area, with limits on yields, have enabled wines with recognised organoleptic characteristics to be produced. Introduced by the Greeks in the 5th century BC and developed by the Romans as they passed through the region, vines have been grown on the banks of the Rhône for a very long time now.

Terrain constraints in this area have given rise to very rigorous vine-training requirements, such as debudding, green pruning and yield control. The same level of rigour can be found in the making and ageing of the wines. Above all else, however, it is the proximity of the major designations of origin and the mixed use of the vineyards by these designations and the geographical indications for many winegrowers of 'Collines Rhodaniennes' that have led to a high level of competition, raising the quality of these wines.

In some areas, such as the Gier Valley, winegrowers have worked towards reintroducing heritage varieties. The development of these native, ancient varieties has helped strengthen the link between the wine and its territory.

The south-easterly or south-westerly exposure of the vineyards provides them with considerable sunlight. The moderate and regular nature of the climate allows the fruit to ripen without overripening and to develop its distinct characteristics.

In addition, the northerly location of the 'Collines Rhodaniennes' production area provides an alternation of hot days and cooler nights when the grapes are ripening, producing wines (especially whites) with a beautiful aromatic finesse.

The winegrowers of 'Collines Rhodaniennes' have managed to produce wines that differ greatly from those of the geographical areas where wines with a protected designation of origin are made, by using acacia barrels or producing wines with residual sugar.

Building on the economic success of winegrowing in this northerly area, a significant proportion of wines with this protected geographical indication are now being bottled on the property and sold with a high added value.
