Proposal for a

REGULATION OF THE EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT AND OF THE COUNCIL

on the European Border and Coast Guard (recast)

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

1. CONTEXT OF THE PROPOSAL

• Reasons for and objectives of the proposal

The European Union (EU) must ensure effective control of its external borders. A significant progress has been made over last years. The EU has put in place the most advanced border management system in the world effectively tackling security risks and illegal migration. Illegal border crossings have fallen to their lowest level since 2021, down 55% over the past two years and by more than a third in 2026 alone. Returns of those without the right to stay in the EU have increased to more than 30%. The EU's collective capacity to manage its external borders has been progressively strengthened with the European Border and Coast Guard Agency (Frontex) acting as a key Union actor in supporting Member States to effectively manage the Union's external borders.

Despite this progress, the protection of EU borders must be further strengthened to respond to the current complex and evolving challenges. Although the number of illegal border crossings into the EU has steadily declined since 2023[1], migratory pressures are likely to persist at both land and sea borders as migrants seek to evade enhanced controls at border crossing points. New technologies and social media are increasingly being exploited to influence migratory flows, facilitate unauthorised crossings and shift routes, undermining the security of the EU's external borders. Migrant smuggling continues to have a major impact[2], as smuggling networks become ever more professional and sophisticated, adapting routes and methods according to demand, opportunities and obstacles. Geopolitical developments continue to shape the EU's external border environment, combined with an increasing range of hybrid threats from disinformation and online manipulation by criminal and other hostile actors to cyber-attacks targeting border management systems and critical infrastructure. In particular, the instrumentalisation of migrants and weaponisation of migration[3] is a continued source of pressure, testing our collective ability to protect the EU's external borders. Cross-border crime is evolving at an unprecedented pace, testing the resilience of the EU's external borders, as organised criminal groups and networks engage in a wide range of illegal activities, such as vehicle theft, drug trafficking[4], firearms trafficking, or document fraud. The EU's proximity to current and former conflict zones also increases its exposure to firearms trafficking, raising the risk that such weapons may be used in Europe.

Furthermore, the events in Ceuta in the summer of 2026 demonstrated how quickly sudden and mass arrivals can build up at the EU's external borders and lead to an exceptional situation. It has also highlighted the importance of the EU and Member States ability to anticipate, prevent and timely respond to emergencies and crises.

At the same time, despite sustained efforts by Member States and EU agencies, a substantial proportion of third-country nationals subject to a return decision does not effectively leave the EU territory.[5] Differences in national capacities, operational practices, and cooperation with third countries also underline the need for stronger coordination and more joint action at EU level, supported by modern digital tools. This would ensure that the EU builds on the momentum generated in return policy by the full implementation of the Pact on Migration and Asylum and the adoption of the Return Regulation[6].

[1] Illegal border crossings into the EU were approximately 380 000 in 2023 and fell in 2025 to approximately 178 000 constituting less than half of the total recorded in 2023 and the lowest level since 2021. Preliminary data shows that unauthorised crossings into the EU fell by 37% in the first seven months of 2026, compared to the same period in 2025, with approximately 61 000 detections recorded at the EU's external borders.

[2] As reiterated in the European Asylum and Migration Management Strategy, over 90% of irregular migrants who reach the EU use services of smugglers for parts or entirety of their journey.

Addressing these challenges requires a modern and credible migration management framework based on a strong border governance to prevent illegal migration and ensure effective returns of those with no right to stay.[7] Strengthening Frontex is a flagship initiative of the Commission for delivering on these objectives.

Already now, the Frontex is the largest EU Agency that embodies the European dimension of border management and return policy by pooling resources, expertise and operational capacity that no single Member State could sustain alone, thereby ensuring a consistent high standard of border control across the Union. As a result, Frontex is the key asset in strengthening the integrity of the Schengen area, reinforcing mutual trust among Member States, and giving practical expression to the principle that the security of one external border is a shared concern of the EU as a whole. Along with Europol and Eurojust, it is also a key component of the European response to security challenges.

To reach the current position, Frontex had to significantly evolve over the last years. Since 2016, together with the relevant national authorities, it forms the European Border and Coast Guard (EBCG), where the responsibility for the EU's external borders is shared with Member States, based on loyal cooperation and support.[8] The Agency delivers on its objectives and tasks through its standing corps[9], i.e. the EU's first uniformed border management and return service expected to reach 10 000 deployable officers by 2027, and the European Border Surveillance System (EUROSUR) that provides a common framework for situational awareness and operational cooperation.

Taking into account these achievements and potential, the President's political guidelines (2024-2029) set the objective of enhancing Frontex's operational capacity, including by increasing the staff available for Frontex operations to 30 000 and by equipping it with state-of-the-art surveillance and situational awareness technologies. The 5-Point Plan[10], adopted by the Commission following the Ceuta events, emphasised the need to strengthen situational awareness in order to anticipate and prevent emergencies at the EU's external borders, and to respond in a timely manner to crisis situations, with Frontex being a key actor delivering on this commitment.

The need to reinforce Frontex, in particular as regards the management of the EU's external borders and the implementation of the common system for returns, has been consistently highlighted by the Member States. Stakeholder consultations, including with Frontex, the evaluation of the Frontex Regulation of 2023[11] and the study accompanying the impact assessment carried out in 2025[12], highlighted the need to: improve the efficiency of Frontex's role in border management and return; ensure Frontex has sufficient operational capacity to deliver on its objectives; and expand training and planning capabilities.

The proposal responds to these challenges. It aims to ensure that Frontex has the tools, governance and operational capacity to support Member States at the external borders, and to improve the effectiveness of returns. To this end, the proposal sets out several modifications in three main priority areas.

Firstly, the proposal transforms Frontex into a truly European agency able to provide a more reliable and tailored support to border protection and return. By increasing the standing corps to 30 000, including through a new European border and return reserve, the Agency will have greater and more flexible capacity, based on a larger pool of officers trained to high common European standards, that will also lead to improved interoperability between EU and national resources enabling faster and more effective deployments, and maximised operational impact of each deployment while easing pressure on Member States' own systems. The Agency will also be equipped with the possibility to acquire, lease and co-own state-of-the-art technical assets that will result in better value-for-money for Member States, more predictable deployments, and reduced critical dependencies.

Secondly, the proposal transforms Frontex into a central operational pillar of the Common European System for Returns responsible for return-related support: from strategic planning, prioritisation, through coordination and implementation of return operations, to readmission and reintegration. The proposal will enhance coordination and strategic pooling of resources aligned with the operational needs identified by Member States, simplify procedures and achieve efficiency through economies of scale, strengthen expertise and capacity to support Member States, and improve governance and strategic planning of the return processes. In this context, together with this proposal, the Commission is taking additional steps to further improve the effectiveness of returns by putting forward a proposal for a Regulation on the digitalisation of case managements in the area of return, readmission and reintegration, establishing a common digital backbone, connecting the relevant authorities, processes and tools[13]. This proposal represents an important tool in the Union's toolbox to deliver on the Union's enhanced ambition to have swift and effective returns, as an integral component of a well-managed EU migration system. Frontex will play a key role in the new common digital architecture, which will allow to manage the return process in a more efficient, cost-effective manner, simplifying procedures and reducing administrative burden.

Thirdly, Frontex will become a more agile and reliable partner supporting Member States in preparedness and crisis response. This will include strengthened role in situational awareness and risk assessment through to more tailored operational support to Member States facing exceptional situations, and closer cooperation with third countries. This will ensure that Member States receive the support they need in situations they need it most.

Secure EU borders are a prerequisite for the functioning of the Schengen area, the safety of EU citizens, and trust among Member States. The proposals ultimately contributes to achieving these objectives.

12 Impact Assessment - SWD(2026) 1030

13 COM(2026) 1037

- Consistency with existing policy provisions in the policy area

The proposal contributes to the EU policy framework on integrated border management, return and migration management, and the protection of the Schengen area. It is an important element of ensuring a high level of security while safeguarding the free movement of persons through the effective management of the EU's external borders.

The proposal updates the legal framework established by Regulation (EU) 2019/1896 on the European Border and Coast Guard, which is the primary legislative instrument. It preserves the core architecture of the existing framework based on shared responsibility, contributions to the standing corps, close cooperation between all Frontex actors, and the division of responsibilities between different EU institutions and bodies, while addressing the legal, operational and structural shortcomings.

Furthermore, the proposal builds on and further develops the comprehensive approach set out in the Pact on Migration and Asylum, where, in line with Regulation (EU) 2024/1351 of the European Parliament and of the Council[14], border management, asylum and return should function as integrated and mutually reinforcing elements of EU migration management. It aims to equip Frontex to assist Member States in swiftly processing third-country nationals arriving at external borders and returning those with no right to stay in the EU, including through EU-level strategic planning and coordination, as well as cooperation with third countries in the area of return.

The proposal will ensure that Frontex's mandate and operational capacity evolve in line with the increased ambition and requirements of the EU return framework and, notably, in the implementation of the Common European System for Returns established by the Return Regulation. It thereby reinforces the coherence between European Integrated Border Management, the broader EU migration architecture, and its return policy.

The proposal is also consistent with the whole-of-route approach to migration management and the broader objectives of the 2026 European Asylum and Migration Management Strategy, which emphasises strengthened cooperation with third countries along migration routes. In this context, a stronger operational role for Frontex in cooperating with third countries in the area of return would complement existing Union and Member State cooperation frameworks, contribute to addressing migratory pressure along migration routes and support greater continuity and coherence across the return process.

The proposal is also consistent with the Schengen Borders Code. In particular, it aligns the possibilities of cooperation with third countries with the agreements foreseen in the Code. It also builds on the experiences with the Union's multiannual strategic policy for European integrated border management.

The proposal builds on the deployment of large-scale EU information systems for border management and security of the Schengen area, including the Schengen Information System (SIS), the Entry/Exit System (EES), the European Travel Information and Authorisation System (ETIAS), the Visa Information System (VIS), thereby contributing to more effective border management, improved risk analysis and enhanced interoperability across the Union. The proposal will be accompanied by modifications to two Interoperability Regulations, as well as the SIS return and SIS borders Regulations, which are necessary to enable the ETIAS Central Unit in Frontex to assume a new role after the completion of its current assignment, and to establish a SIRENE Bureau within Frontex to enable the exchange of information on SIS alerts on return and for refusal of entry and stay.

[14] Regulation - EU - 2024/1351 - EN - EUR-Lex.

- Consistency with other Union policies

The proposal is consistent with the Union's broader policies on internal security, external relations and enlargement.

It is consistent with the objectives of the new European internal security strategy, ProtectEU, which identifies secure external borders as an essential component of the EU's internal security architecture, and supports a more integrated European response to hybrid threats, organised crime and illegal migration. By strengthening Frontex through enhanced surveillance and situational awareness capabilities and by providing the legal framework for the further development of Frontex's standing corps, the proposal directly contributes to the objective of reinforcing EU external border management and therefore supports the objective of strengthening internal security. To that end, it also facilitates closer operational cooperation and information exchange between Frontex, Europol and national law enforcement authorities in the fight against migrant smuggling and other cross-border criminal activities. The proposal is also consistent with the European Commission's proposal for a new sanctions regime tackling forms of organised crime which threaten the EU's values and security, including migrant smuggling, human trafficking, drug trafficking and arms trafficking, which is currently pending negotiations.[15]

The proposal contributes to the broader response to hybrid threats. In particular, it aims to enrich the situational picture by extending the scope of data sharing in the framework of EUROSUR. Together with inter-agency cooperation at the EU level, this will lead to a significant improvement of the situational awareness and an increase of reaction capabilities within the EU, without creating overlaps with other information systems deployed by EU agencies. The proposal will be complemented by the planned Earth Observation Governmental Service (EOGS), being prepared by the Commission, which will expand the Earth observation capabilities available to the Union for security and defence.

The proposal also aims to further enhance European cooperation on coastguard functions with the European Fisheries Control Agency (EFCA) and the European Maritime Safety Agency (EMSA), as well as with other relevant EU actors, to improve the complementarity and synergies between those agencies and to provide more efficient and cost-effective multi-purpose services to national authorities, while fully respecting the division of responsibilities between the respective actors.

The proposal is consistent with EU policy on cooperation with third countries. In addition to contributing to the whole-of-route approach set out in the European Asylum and Migration Management Strategy, it strengthens the Union's ability to engage with partner countries along key migratory routes. It promotes closer strategic and operational cooperation through status agreements and capacity-building measures. It offers reinforced support in areas, such as vulnerability assessments, tailored training or risk assessment products to improve cooperation on border management, combat abuses of visas to the EU and prevent illegal border crossings. This will help support alignment with the EU acquis on migration, asylum and visa policy, and strengthen cooperation on return and readmission.

The proposed measures remain coherent with broader EU external action objectives. The proposal seeks to enable Frontex, and by extension the EU, to better identify and leverage synergies across the various strands of EU external action, wherever such synergies exist, maximising effectiveness and mitigating the risk of duplicated efforts, without reducing the role of the EU Institutions and the Member States in defining and influencing Union policy in this area.

The proposal supports the implementation of the first EU Visa Policy Strategy, which recognises the visa system as the Union's first line of security screening. It reaffirms the dual objective of visa policy: to safeguard EU security and integrity while facilitating legitimate bona fide travel that is beneficial to the Union. In this context, the proposal strengthens Frontex's contribution to the implementation of the EU visa policy, including through training capacity, document security and document fraud expertise, and capacities to develop targeted risk analysis products. By enhancing Frontex's support to Member States on visa policy with a new Visa support office, the proposal reinforces the security dimension of EU visa policy in a manner consistent with the objectives of the Visa Policy Strategy.

Furthermore, the proposal also supports the EU's digital transformation agenda by facilitating the use of modern surveillance technologies, interoperable information systems and advanced situational awareness capabilities within European Integrated Border Management. This will be complemented by the proposal for a Regulation on the digitalisation case management in the area of return, readmission and reintegration. This proposal provides Frontex with the appropriate operational framework to develop further and support the effective implementation of the future digital architecture, enabling more efficient information exchange, coordination and management of return-related processes.

2. LEGAL BASIS, SUBSIDIARITY AND PROPORTIONALITY

• Legal basis

The proposal is based on Articles 77(2)(b) and (d), and by Article 79(2)(c) of the TFEU. Article 77(2)(b) empowers the Union to adopt legislation governing checks on individuals crossing external borders. Article 77(2)(d) provides for the adoption of measures necessary for the progressive development of an integrated management system for external borders. Article 79(2)(c) authorises the implementation of measures to address illegal migration, including removal and repatriation of individuals residing without valid authorisation.

• Subsidiarity (for non-exclusive competence)

The challenges addressed by this proposal are inherently transnational and cannot be effectively tackled by Member States acting alone. The management of the Union's external borders is a shared European responsibility, and shortcomings in one part of the external border may have consequences for the functioning, security and integrity of the Schengen area as a whole. Geopolitical developments, hybrid threats, increasingly sophisticated criminal and smuggling networks, and the growing need for digital and operational capabilities have further highlighted the need for a coordinated Union response in the area of border management and return. Fragmented national approaches limit the effectiveness of border management, return operations and crisis preparedness, and cannot adequately address challenges that extend beyond the territory or capacities of individual Member States. Action at Union level is, therefore, both necessary and more effective.

Effective management and control of the Union's external borders is in the interest of all Member States. The abolition of internal border controls within the Schengen area means that external border management directly affects the functioning, security, and integrity of the Union as a whole. Perceived deficiencies in the management of external borders, combined with migratory challenges and security risks, have led in the past to the reintroduction of internal border controls undermining trust between Member States. Abuses of visas to the Union also place strain on that trust.

Through the European Border and Coast Guard, Frontex supports Member States by providing a common operational framework, facilitating the pooling of expertise and technical assets, strengthening common risk analysis and situational awareness, and enabling the rapid deployment of personnel and equipment where needed. It also reinforces the coordination of return operations, promotes the consistent application of common standards, and enhances cooperation with third countries, thereby increasing the effectiveness of national authorities while fully respecting their operational responsibilities. By developing shared capabilities and coordination mechanisms at Union level, the proposal avoids duplication, generates economies of scale and ensures a coherent and resilient approach to the management of the Union's external borders. In a Schengen area without internal border controls, such collective action is essential to safeguard the effective functioning of the area of freedom, security and justice while ensuring the uniform implementation of the integrated European border management system.

- Proportionality

In line with the principle of proportionality, as set out in Article 5 of the Treaty on European Union, this proposal does not go beyond what is necessary to achieve its objectives. The proposal introduces targeted measures to strengthen the effectiveness of the European Border and Coast Guard framework by addressing systemic shortcomings in areas where coordinated Union action provides clear added value, including the deployment of the standing corps, border surveillance, return operations, and crisis response. It focuses on reinforcing operational cooperation, improving coordination and ensuring the uniform application of common standards, while preserving Member States' operational responsibility and primary competence for the management of their external borders. The proposal is limited to measures that cannot be effectively achieved by Member States acting alone and leaves flexibility for national authorities in the implementation of common standards, taking into account their specific operational, legal and geographical contexts.

- Choice of the instrument

This proposal amends and expands Regulation (EU) 2019/1896. Since the amendments to be made are substantial in number and nature, the legal act is a recast in order to ensure the necessary clarity.

The evolution of the Agency’s role requires a modernised legal framework to provide the legal certainty, predictability, and accountability necessary for it to carry out its reinforced mandate effectively. The revised legal framework needs to allow the Agency to perform its enhanced functions efficiently while operating within a clear, robust, and predictable legal environment, and maintaining the operational flexibility needed to respond to evolving threats.

3. RESULTS OF EX-POST EVALUATIONS, STAKEHOLDER CONSULTATIONS AND IMPACT ASSESSMENTS

- Ex-post evaluations/fitness checks of existing legislation

On 2 February 2024, the European Commission published its evaluation report on Regulation (EU) 2019/1896[16], including a review of the standing corps, on the basis of the data available up to the end of 2023. The evaluation did not cover the Agency’s integrated capability planning, as that mechanism was formalised only at the end of the evaluation period. The evaluation concluded that the Regulation remained broadly fit for purpose in responding to the challenges affecting the Union's external borders. It nevertheless identified certain shortcomings and areas requiring further improvement. In particular, it highlighted: the lack of clarity on the exact role of Frontex in implementing certain tasks, such as those related to cross border crime; divergent operational procedures across Member States, which impede the uniform implementation of EIBM; the need for a long-term strategic approach and predictability in investments in human and technical capabilities; gaps in the quality of training provided to the standing corps and constraints arising from the Staff Regulations that prevent full integration of the Agency's own operational staff; limitations in providing an updated, accurate and comprehensive situational picture and risk analysis; and obstacles to the conclusion of working arrangements that hamper cooperation with third countries. Finally, the evaluation report suggested to improve the oversight and strategic steering, particularly on return-related issues. These gaps were subsequently reflected in an action plan that is regularly updated by the Commission and Frontex.

- Stakeholder consultations

The proposal was prepared through a broad consultation process involving national authorities, Frontex, other EU agencies, civil society, academia, international organisations, social partners, and the general public on the functioning of Regulation (EU) 2019/1896.

A Call for Evidence[17] collected initial views on key shortcomings and policy options, followed by a public consultation[18] on the effectiveness, efficiency, coherence and EU added value of the current framework.

This was complemented by a targeted survey[19] of practitioners and specialised organisations, as well as targeted interviews on operational constraints, governance arrangements and safeguards.

The Commission discussed the future of the Agency and the revision of its mandate with Member States in several Council configurations, including the Justice and Home Affairs Council, Strategic Committee on Immigration, Frontiers and Asylum (SCIFA), and the Council Frontiers Working Party. Member States' experts were also consulted through the Schengen Borders Committee, the EBCG expert group and bilateral exchanges.

In June 2024, the Justice and Home Affairs Council underlined organisational, technical and governance-related shortcoming sand called for a structural reform of the Agency alongside more flexible and adequately resourced operational capacities. In March 2025, the European Council reaffirmed the Union's determination to strengthen security at its external borders and ensure their effective control in full compliance with Union and international law.

The Commission also exchanged views with the European Parliament, notably the Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs (LIBE) and the Schengen and Borders Scrutiny Working Group

Exchanges were also held between the Commission and the Agency highlighting the need to move from a fragmented and reactive model towards an integrated and resilient system, supported by stronger planning, investment, training, technological development, cooperation with Member States and third countries, and full respect for ethical standards and fundamental rights.

17 European Border and Coast Guard/Frontex – standing corps review and evaluation of Regulation

18 European Border and Coast Guard – update of EU rules

19 ICF study to be published.

The consultation results showed broad agreement that, despite the significant contribution of the European Border and Coast Guard framework, implementation shortcomings warrant targeted legislative adjustments to further strengthen the European integrated border management. Stakeholders also supported strengthening Frontex's role in the area of return, readmission and reintegration, and cooperation with third countries. Many Member States, national authorities and operational actors underlined the need to further modernise the regulatory framework to reflect technological developments, interoperable information systems, stronger risk analysis and preparedness, and clearer responsibilities between the Agency and national authorities. The feedback received was taken into account in the design of the proposal, including by reflecting stakeholders' calls for greater legal clarity, streamlined procedures, and technological adaptations.

- Collection and use of expertise

The Commission relied on external expertise to support both the evaluation and the impact assessment accompanying this proposal. In particular, an external study carried out between 2 April 2025 and 2 February 2026 provided a comprehensive evidence base drawing on input from Member States, EU bodies, offices and agencies, Frontex, standing corps officers, Frontex Consultative Forum members, law enforcement networks, and other relevant stakeholders.

- Impact assessment

Prior to the legislative proposal, an impact assessment had been carried out to examine policy options for addressing shortcomings in the current EBCG Regulation that reduce its effectiveness in border management and return, as well as deficiencies in training, planning and Frontex's quality control mechanisms.

The baseline scenario assumed that structural problems would persist. These problems stemmed from legal ambiguities, limitations in the existing mandate and established practices, notably in the areas of return, data sharing and equipment procurement. It also assumed that the strategic risks identified in the Strategic Risk Analysis Report[20] would materialise and place additional pressure on the Schengen area. Although non-legislative adjustments and fuller use of existing tools could bring some incremental improvements, they would not be sufficient to overcome these structural constraints or to ensure the flexibility and surge capacity required to respond to rapidly changing operational needs.

Against this background, three policy options were assessed.

Policy Option 1 focused on enhancing the effectiveness by addressing shortcomings identified in the 2024 evaluation of the EBCG Regulation and improving overall preparedness for crisis situations, while maintaining the current pace of development and implementation of the EIBM.

Policy Option 2 built on this approach by introducing additional measures to strengthen border management and return, including a new standing corps category, reinforced training, and steps towards a more harmonised EIBM-based structure supported by better planning, quality assurance and technical equipment development.

[20] Strategic_Risk_Analysis_2024_Report.pdf

Policy Option 3 represented the most ambitious approach, providing for a broader expansion of the EBCG mandate and capabilities in order to fully deliver on EIBM objectives and maximise Frontex's role in border management and return.

- Regulatory fitness and simplification

The proposal simplifies the implementation of the European Border and Coast Guard framework, while ensuring that any additional obligations for Member States are proportionate and justified by operational needs.

The preferred options reinforce the Agency's role in overall planning and coordination. Member States may need to improve the quality of information shared under existing rules. The introduction of common methodologies, templates and the streamlining of processes will reduce repeated requests and improve the link between priorities, operational needs and resources. The proposal also removes duplicate EUROSUR tasks, strengthens central fusion services, promotes the reuse of risk analysis outputs in planning, and lowers the default communication network classification to the level generally used in practice, while allowing higher classification where needed. Overall, this should reduce duplication, avoid over-classification, and make better use of existing information.

The proposal also introduces simplifications for operational cooperation and support. In the external dimension, status agreements with third countries can also cover technical assistance, avoiding separate working arrangement where operational cooperation is already covered. It also allows more targeted and flexible agreements and extends cooperation with international organisations beyond the current list. In technical equipment and innovation, the Agency could organise joint procurement, act as a central purchasing body, and promote common technical standards, reducing redundant tenders, testing and procurement. Support for Member States' standing corps category 2 contributions is also simplified by linking financing directly to actual secondments, making it easier to verify and administer.

The expected increase of operations, the expansion of Agency's tasks and activities could increase the workload of the Management Board and executive director. The proposal therefore foresees modifications to the Agency's governance structure to increase the efficiency of the Management Board, in particular by reinforcing the Executive Board as competent preparatory entity, which could assume certain roles in operational decisions making in different areas, in particular return.

Overall, any additional burdens, particularly in planning coordination, acquisitions of technical equipment, information sharing, and training, would be offset by the positive impact on the security in the Schengen area, thanks to more efficient border management and returns.

As regards the increase of the standing corps size, the accompanying measures, in particular the modified training architecture, the simplified financial support, and use of multiannual rather than annual contribution schemes, should significantly alleviate the burdens related to recruitment and upkeep of the European border and return reserve.

The regulatory burden varies per thematic area but remains limited overall, as many of the proposed measures clarify existing rules and build on existing structures, in particular for return and training.

More generally, the recast seeks to make the Agency's mandate easier to implement by clarifying the applicable rules, aligning procedures with operational realities, and promoting reuse of existing tools instead of creating additional layers of obligations.

- Fundamental rights

This proposal respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, notably the rights to respect for private and family life (Article 7), protection of personal data (Article 8), asylum (Article 18), protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition, including the principle of non-refoulement (Article 19), the rights of the child (Article 24), and the right to an effective remedy (Article 47).

In line with relevant Union and international law, the proposal ensures that operational activities are carried out with full respect for fundamental rights and with particular attention to vulnerable persons and the best interests of the child. Any interference with Charter rights must be necessary, proportionate and subject to appropriate safeguards. Data-related measures remain subject to the applicable Union data protection framework. The proposal also maintains oversight and accountability mechanisms.

Where cooperation with third countries is envisaged, it must take place within the framework of Union external action. Status agreements for operations involving executive powers must include safeguards.

Overall, the proposal seeks to ensure that operational effectiveness and fundamental rights protection are mutually reinforcing. It supports effective border management and return-related action while preserving clear legal limits, procedural guarantees, monitoring and remedies.

4. BUDGETARY IMPLICATIONS

The proposal envisages a strengthened role of Frontex in supporting Member States, including by gradually expanding its capabilities (human and technical resources), as well as enhancing its core activities in relation to the management of the external borders and returns. The implementation of the new proposed measures as well as ensuring the continuation of Frontex' existing activities has budgetary implications at EU level.

At the same time, experience with the implementation of the current Regulation has demonstrated that a single seven-year Multiannual Financial Framework period can suffice, albeit not without challenges, to implement the standing corps concept in its current form, namely 10 000 deployable officers across category 1 of Agency statutory staff, category 2 of national officers seconded by Member States for longer-term deployments, and category 3 of national officers made available by Member States for short-term deployments, as well as a dormant category 4 for rapid reactions. Based on experience over a 7-years period, two additional periods of the same duration, until 2041, would represent a reasonable implementation timeframe to reach the objective of expanding the standing corps to 30 000 officers. The proposed growth would not be achieved through the linear expansion of the existing categories. In line with the rationale for deeper integration and interoperability described above, a sustainable increase in category 1 staff would instead be accompanied by the introduction of an additional reserve of uniformly trained national officers, whose training and potential subsequent deployments in an EBCG context would be organised and overseen by the Agency.

For the next Multiannual Financial Framework (MFF) period (2028-2034), the Commission proposed to allocate EUR 11.888 billion to the European Border and Coast Guard Agency. The budget will include costs linked to EBCG standing corps, taking into account the envisaged growth of the standing corps category 1 officers and the establishment of a new European border and return reserve (by 2034), the setting up of a comprehensive training framework for all categories of standing corps, the implementation of the multiannual strategy for the acquisition, leasing and development of the Agency's equipment, strengthening Frontex' support to Member States covering return, readmission and reintegration, cooperation frameworks with partner third countries, EU entities and international organisations, the development of the digital tools to foster return in line with the proposal for a Regulation on the digitalisation of case management in the area of return, readmission and reintegration, Frontex' current operational activities (e.g. EUROSUR).

Some of the proposed measures aim to increase efficiency and cost-effectiveness, reducing financial and administrative burden for the Agency. This includes aligning, as a general rule, the place of employment to the place of deployment rationalising the system of financial allocations for standing corps to render it better tailored for long-term operational service, as well as increased efficiency of Frontex-managed returns, including through improved coordination on returns.

The proposal also envisages that incoming revenues can be considered in relation to Frontex costs. This includes the fee generated by the operation of ETIAS, expected to cover costs related to ETIAS operational expenditures, and could include additional revenues from fees generated from services run by the Agency, including for instance carrying out compliance checks of travel and identity documents.

Additionally, within the policy reference framework set out in Article 22(2) of the National and Regional Partnership Plans (NRPP) Regulation, the Commission will call on Member States to finance measures in their National and Regional Partnership Plans in support of the implementation of this Regulation.

The detailed financial implications of the proposal are set out in the legislative financial statement accompanying the proposal. The estimated financial and staffing implications for 2028 and beyond are provided for illustrative purposes only and do not pre-empt decisions on the next MFF. The funding sources and the extent of the EU's financial commitment beyond 2027 will depend on the outcome of the interinstitutional negotiations for the 2028-2034 MFF. Thereafter they must be determined through the annual budgetary procedure. All appropriations and staffing allocations from 2028 onwards are therefore indicative.

5. OTHER ELEMENTS

- Implementation plans and monitoring, evaluation and reporting arrangements

The implementation of the proposal will follow reinforced governance structures applicable to decentralised EU agencies, with Frontex reporting regularly to the Management Board. The Executive Board will assist the Management Board in overseeing the preparation and implementation of the annual and multiannual programming, and in reinforcing supervision of administrative and budgetary management.

Performance, operational outcomes, and compliance with legal and data protection obligations will be monitored and evaluated using established reporting cycles and procedures. The proposal retains the Frontex's obligation to exchange information relevant to its tasks with the Commission and the Member States, which will enable effective monitoring of the overall performance of the Regulation.

The Commission will evaluate the functioning and effectiveness of the Regulation s and report on its performance.

- Detailed explanation of the specific provisions of the proposal

Explanations are provided for substantial changes in operative part per Chapter. The consequential modifications or technical adjustments are listed at the end of this section.

Chapter I – European Border and Coast Guard

Article 1 (subject matter) emphasises the enhanced role of Frontex in European integrated border management to support free movement in the Schengen area, the common system for returns, cooperation with third countries, and a high level of internal security of the Union by countering cross-border crime, while reflecting legislative developments such as the entry into force of the Pact on Migration and Asylum and the adoption of the Return Regulation.

Article 2 introduces targeted technical amendments to clarify concepts where legal uncertainty hindered implementation. These include new definitions and clarifications concerning Agency's operational actions in border management and returns. It also reflects Frontex's role in countering hybrid threats more clearly as well as its increased tasks in return.

The stronger emphasis on return, the greater clarity on Frontex's role in countering hybrid threats in border management, and a new focus on the implementation of the Union visa policy are also reflected in Article 3 on European Integrated Border Management (EIBM).

Article 5 (European Border and Coast Guard Agency) sets the ambition to increase the capacity of the standing corps after 2027, towards a target of 30 000, to strengthen Frontex's capacity to respond to challenges at the EU external borders, accommodating its new tasks and the expected increase in demand for support on border management and the implementation of the Pact, in particular the return border procedure.

Article 7 on shared responsibility reflects the equal importance of border management and return among the Agency's tasks. In addition to the existing provisions on border management, the article introduces the central role of Frontex in returns from the Union and clarifies the need for the Member States to coordinate their national return operations with the Agency.

Article 8 enhances the multiannual strategic policy cycle for EIBM, notably by requiring Member States to transmit their national strategies for EIBM to the Agency and the Commission. The Agency will assess their completeness and consistency with the Union's multiannual strategic policy and the Agency's technical and operational strategy.

Article 9 improves integrated planning for border management and return. Risk analysis, EUROSUR, vulnerability assessments and relevant Schengen evaluation findings will feed into operational, contingency and capability development planning, allowing risks and capability gaps to inform decisions on staffing, training, equipment and operational support.

A new Article 10 establishes a multiannual European integrated border management planning coordination scheme, adopted by the Management Board, setting common timelines for the main planning outputs. It aligns the national strategies for EIBM, contingency and capability development plans, return planning information, the capability roadmap and relevant Agency outputs, without creating additional planning products.

Chapter II – Functioning of the European Border and Coast Guard

Article 11 on the tasks of the Agency is revised to better define and integrate the Agency's role on return in its tasks. New tasks cover the planning, coordination, and carrying out of return activities, the management of an EU reintegration programme, the implementation of the return border procedure, the digitalisation of return, readmission and reintegration, and assistance to third countries in the area of return.

This Article also gives the Agency a clear mandate to monitor internet activities, including online platforms, with the explicit and well-defined purpose of enhancing the Union's preparedness through improved situational awareness and risk analysis. The resulting anonymised and aggregated information may be used to enrich the European situational picture.

The Article clarifies the Agency's task of conducting debriefing interviews, including the scope and purpose. The entry into force of the Pact on Migration and Asylum risked creating confusion and ambiguities between the role of screening procedures and possibility to perform debriefing interviews, which are also addressed in this Article and in the definition of 'debriefings'.

In addition, the Article specifies how the Agency may assist Member States in combatting cross-border crime at the external borders of the Union, including through operational support, possible use of executive powers, and improved situational awareness. It also reflects hybrid threats.

Furthermore, the Article tasks the Agency with supporting the Member States in implementing the Union's visa policy and in the prevention of abuses by third-country nationals of short-stay and long-term visas to the EU and abuses in relation to residence permits.

Finally, it leverages the Agency's expertise in the area of integrated border management, by promoting an expanded involvement of the Agency in the implementation of Union projects on border management in third countries. This ensures the effectiveness of these projects, on one hand, and promotes coordination, synergies and cost-efficiency, while avoiding duplications of EU-funded efforts.

Articles 15 to 17 enhance the security of information exchange, including within EUROSUR, by upgrading the communication network and establishing a security accreditation structure. The communication network will enable the secure, near-real-time exchange of sensitive non-classified and EU classified information across the EBCG. The Security Accreditation Authority will cover systems within the Agency, while the Security Accreditation Board will cover the European and external components of EUROSUR and related systems and applications.

This effort is complemented by various amendments to Articles concerning EUROSUR, namely Articles 21-31. Articles 21 and 22, specifically concerning the purpose and the scope of EUROSUR as the EBCG integrated framework for the exchange of information and for operational cooperation, are expanded to include incident reporting concerning threats of hybrid nature at the external borders.

Article 26 reinforces the mechanism of monitoring of EUROSUR, allowing the executive director to act in case of identified shortcomings in data reporting, when large-scale inflow of people is detected at the borders or when monitoring online platforms identifies migratory threats.

Articles 27 and 29 complete this streamlined approach by reiterating the new additional focus on hybrid threats and later explicitly calling for the introduction – into the European Situational Picture that is accessible to, and populated by, the EBCG as a whole – of data derived from activities, including monitoring of online platforms. Moreover, Article 28 dedicated to the national situational pictures clarifies that events and incidents should be reported in EUROSUR within 24 hours. The proposed approach aims to deliver significant added value in terms of data quality and situational awareness. The EUROSUR framework itself is kept separate from personal data processing activities (except in clearly defined, exceptional circumstances, as is already the case), and the Agency is tasked with enriching and complementing the European Situational Picture with aggregated, anonymised, statistical data that may derive from processes, performed outside the EUROSUR framework, that may entail processing of personal data, such as analysis of debriefing interviews or the monitoring of online platforms. This approach will transform the European Situational Picture into an even more effective and broadly applicable situational awareness and preparedness tool.

Article 29 extends access to the European Situational Picture to the Commission and relevant JHA Agencies, as well as EFCA and EMSA, to facilitate greater interoperability and better cooperation among relevant EU bodies and Agencies.

Similarly, in Article 31, the Agency is explicitly mandated to provide information derived from its EUROSUR fusion services, such as aerial surveillance and satellite imagery, to the Commission, the EEAS and the aforementioned Agencies, upon their request, thus significantly improving the quality of the data and available information. The Agency may also use relevant surveillance tools on its own initiative to collect pre-frontier information for the European situational picture. However, in cases of potential crisis situation, certain measures, such as the timeliness of reporting and monitoring of EUROSUR as well as the use of EUROSUR fusion services, will be further reinforced.

In accordance with new Article 32 on advance warning mechanism, the Agency will contribute to the monitoring of the security of external borders or migratory flows when Member States report deterioration of the situation at their external borders. In such cases, the reporting will be immediate, alerts will be issued in the European Situational Picture for all Member States to become aware, and the Agency will have the possibility to launch the EUROSUR fusion services over the external border section under pressure, in consultation with the Member State concerned. As a consequence, a joint operation or border intervention may be activated. These additional measures aim to reinforce the early warning dimension of EUROSUR and provide additional tools to deter any potential crisis.

Article 33 sets up an Online monitoring and response centre, to allow the Agency to contribute to situational awareness and better inform the decision makers at EU and national level on incidents originating in online activities, which could potentially affect the management of external borders and migration policy. This will include the possibility to notify online platforms of illegal content on their services, with Frontex acting as a trusted flagger in accordance with the Digital Services Act (DSA), as well as the possibility to ask national competent authorities to issue removal orders in line with the relevant DSA provisions. The new centre will also cooperate closely with other relevant EU Agencies and bodies to ensure coordination and complementarity of efforts.

Article 34 strengthens the Agency's risk analysis by providing for general, tailored and strategic risk analysis products, extending its coverage to return, hybrid threats and relevant developments in third countries, and linking it more closely to the EIBM policy cycle and integrated planning.

The Agency's vulnerability assessment is strengthened in Article 37 to enhance its scope, clarity, and effectiveness. The vulnerability assessment will explicitly cover return, including the implementation of the return border procedure, Member States' capacity to manage large-scale arrivals and return operations within legal deadlines, and the monitoring of the quality of data fed into EUROSUR. The Article also introduces the possibility for the Agency to perform vulnerability assessments in third countries, upon a request by that third country, which would lead to recommendations helping third countries improve their integrated border management and/or return frameworks. Lastly, the Article better links the vulnerability assessment and the Schengen evaluation mechanisms.

Articles 41-53 that govern the Agency's activities at the external border aim to optimise and clarify the existing framework. The border intervention is revised to allow for the executive director to activate the new European border and return reserve in exceptional situations. Operational plans must better reflect vulnerability assessments and Schengen evaluations, and, where relevant, support cooperation with national civil protection authorities, including in natural disasters. Article 46 on proposed actions at external borders introduces the possibility for the management board to issue a recommendation, based on a proposal from the executive director setting out, where necessary, operational actions to be taken by the Member States concerned, together with the timeframe for their implementation. This provision strengthens the tools available to the Agency to ensure an effective protection of external borders in cooperation and with transparency towards other Member States.

The new Article 48 lays down specific arrangements for the Agency's operational response in situations of crisis at the external borders, as defined in Regulation (EU) 2024/1359. It enables the Executive Director to recommend to the Member State concerned to request the Agency to initiate, reinforce or adapt operational support, including through joint operations, border interventions or other relevant actions under Article 41. The Member State is required to respond within a short deadline, reflecting the urgency inherent in crisis situations. To ensure a swift and effective reaction, the Article provides that the Agency should prioritise the deployment of officers from the European border and return reserve already present in the Member State concerned, as well as from the Agency's quick reaction force. It also allows the Agency to provide technical and operational support without requiring the immediate formal revision of an existing Operational Plan or the negotiation of a new one, thereby reducing procedural delays in emergencies. Given the urgent nature and complexity of such deployments, the Article foresees that monitoring of compliance with fundamental rights is to be carried out ex post, thus ensuring adequate focus on response and adjusting monitoring to operational needs in exceptional circumstances, while leaving the Member States a possibility to request the earlier involvement of the fundamental rights monitors. The Article ensures accountability and institutional oversight by requiring the Agency and the Member State concerned to report to the Management Board, within one month of the declaration of the crisis situation, on progress regarding the update of the existing or the preparation of a new Operational Plan.

Under Article 52, the potential decision by the executive director to terminate or suspend a Frontex joint operation in whole would carry significant impact for both the Agency and the concerned Member State. For example, for the Agency, such decision may create pressure to justify its absence from a situation affected by significant migratory pressure. The Member State concerned would be forced to deal with the migratory pressure without the technical and operational support provided by the Agency. This scenario differs markedly, in terms of scale and operational impact, from smaller-scale scenarios where Frontex may suspend an activity. Therefore, the regulation is revised to require the executive director to consult the Management Board in this case, contributing to better informed decision-making and responsibility-sharing among the EBCG.

Articles 54-65, concerning the role of the Agency in return, have been significantly overhauled to address existing gaps in coordination, planning and operational needs. The Agency is given a key role in the common system for returns, starting with the establishment of a Return Coordination Centre within Frontex with tasks including the collection and analysis of operational information on return, supporting the planning and coordination of reintegration assistance, regularly sharing information on planned return operations with the Member States to maximise cost-effectiveness and efficiency, and drawing up and maintaining the already-existing rolling operational plan for return. The proposed changes are intended to strengthen the Agency's ability to anticipate needs, coordinate available resources and provide comprehensive operational support, thereby contributing to a more effective and coherent implementation of the common system for returns.

Moreover, Member States will be required to provide Frontex with clearer and more indicative and quantifiable planning data on return, allowing the Agency to develop a more reliable picture of expected return need and better organise its resources to support returns from the Union. This data will also be shared with the Commission. More systematic and forward-looking planning will allow resources to be deployed where they are most needed and will improve the Union's ability to anticipate fluctuations in return needs. With regard to the provision of technical and operational assistance on returns from the Union, Article 55 is significantly expanded and complements Article 59 to effectively turn Frontex into the Union actor in all aspects and phases of return procedures, from European-level coordination to return counselling to reintegration assistance and all activities in between. This broader role is intended to provide greater continuity across the different stages of the return process, reducing fragmentation between activities and enabling the Agency to provide more coherent operational support to Member States.

In parallel, this enhanced role is matched with a significant role for the Agency in the digitalisation of the area of return, which is intended to address the current fragmentation of return case management and information exchange and provide the Union with a more integrated digital infrastructure supporting the return process. This starts with the task to manage and further develop the RECAMAS model (the Frontex-developed reference blueprint designed to support Member States build, upgrade and harmonise their IT systems for return) to develop and manage the Frontex RECAMAS (an off-the-shelf IT system based on the RECAMAS model), the integrated Union readmission case management system (iRCMS), and the Union reintegration case management system (RIAT), in line with the Commission proposal for a Regulation on digitalisation of return, readmission and reintegration. Frontex is also tasked with operating an integrated return management platform that is connected to the aforementioned systems, in order to cement the Agency's central role in the coordination of return activities from the Union. The need to prioritise returns in the context of the Return Border Procedure is also explicitly mentioned.

The Agency's role in the provision of reintegration assistance is also elevated in order to address the current fragmentation of reintegration support and make better strategic use of the resources and programmes available at Union and national level. Frontex will be responsible for identifying the Member States' reintegration-related needs, coordinating the provision of reintegration to returnees departing from the EU, not only among Member States but also with all partners involved in the delivery of reintegration, including in third countries, developing a Union-level reintegration programme, and facilitating the referral of returnees to relevant development programmes in third countries. Overall, this endeavours to not only significantly increase the effectiveness of existing programmes, eliminating loopholes or wasteful duplications, but also contribute to long-term reintegration.

Articles 57 and 58 contribute to the Agency's enhanced role in the digitalisation of return, by tasking the Agency with continuing to operate but also further develop the Integrated Return Management Platform (IRMA) and establishing its role in relation to the Schengen Information System. Article 58 also establishes a SIRENE office within the Agency, strengthening the Agency's access to, and exchange of, relevant SIS alerts on return and for refusal of entry and stay, enhancing the Agency's situational awareness.

Articles 63 and 64 give Frontex a mandate to support return activities departing from third countries. This represents an entirely new set of tasks and responsibilities for the Agency, consisting of technical and operational assistance depending on the specific circumstances. Such assistance can be provided in two cases. Firstly, when assisting the third country with returns that are based on a return decision of a Member State, provided this is in the strategic interest of the Union. Secondly, when assisting the third country with implementing an individual obligation to leave under its national law, covering: countries that have been granted the status of candidate country for accession, countries bound by the European Convention on Human Rights, countries designated as 'safe third countries' at Union level, and other countries provided that there is clear EU interest. In all cases, the Agency's operational assistance can be provided only based on a Union level international agreement specifying the scope of the Agency's assistance, the safeguards, the tasks and powers of the members of the return teams, and their privileges and immunities. Article 64 outlines the minimum safeguards that such agreements should contain, such as the commitment by the third country to respect international human rights standards and the principle of non-refoulement. In addition, it may be necessary to include other or more detailed safeguards depending on the third country's level of alignment with EU rules and standards.

Article 65 completes this new framework by explicitly mandating cooperation with third countries on return to be in line with Union policy priorities. The Article requires that all resource-related implications of such operational cooperation – and their foreseen impact on the Agency's ability to support returns from the Union, which remains its main focus– be duly considered before the Commission recommends to the Council to authorise it to negotiate an agreement with a third country.

Articles 66-79 strengthen the Agency's capabilities in order to ensure that the planned increase in personnel is matched by interoperable, sustainable and readily deployable operational capacity. The new architecture of the standing corps is proposed, with a reinforced category 1 and a new European border and return reserve to support the European Border and Coast Guard in the effective implementation of European Integrated Border Management and the common system for return.

The concept of a European border and return reserve, an addition to the existing categories is provided for in Article 70. It aims to create a truly integrated European border management personnel that seamlessly links national and Frontex personnel. Over time, national authorities could draw, at no extra cost, personnel with enhanced EIBM training in border management and return, while strengthening cooperation with counterparts from other Member States. This workforce would primarily perform national border management and return tasks, but with the Agency's coordination, it could also be mobilised to rapidly respond to developments at the external border or in the area of return, helping to ensure a swift, qualified, and effective response to challenges related to border and migration management. Apart from category 4, which was already phased out as of 2025, the existing categories remain in place, with a reinforced and more flexible category 1.

The proposal also makes the standing corps more flexible in its operational tasks, increasing its effectiveness and improving the support Frontex can offer both in the field and at headquarters. It further clarifies the executive powers of category 1 officers so they can better support Member States and includes minor revisions to improve Agency's planning and continuity, such as extending the minimum category 3 deployment from one month to two. Technical amendments also introduce more flexible training and qualification requirements for officers not expected to perform border control tasks. This ensures that requirements match actual duties rather than applying a standardised approach. The objective is to help the Agency to recruit personnel with the necessary expertise to perform the wide range of tasks of the Agency. For specialist functions, such as return coordination, intelligence analysis, or monitoring, the recruitment of experts must not be limited by requirements such as passing standardised physical tests or demonstrating proficiency with a service weapon. This improved approach will broaden the pool for recruitment and facilitate the acquisition of expertise and talent.

Article 71 introduces into the Regulation the existing concepts of chain of command and contingents, which Frontex is currently operationalising. This structure enables the creation of geographical or thematic structures overseeing Frontex's activities in specific areas at the EU external borders and third countries, to ensure a more consistent implementation of the Agency's operational and logistical activities by bringing the operational coordination closer to the operational area, and facilitate cooperation between the Agency and the host Member State or third country. The already defined concept of antenna offices is further clarified in Article 73, to ensure that it is embedded into the contingent management structure, thus promoting the identification of synergies, ensuring cost-effectiveness, and avoiding duplication of structures or reporting lines.

A new Article 72 is established to introduce the concept of quick reaction force, composed of deployable standing corps officers who are equipped and trained to be rapidly deployed at short notice and covering all operational areas at the EU external borders. Such quick reaction force will be deployed almost instantly, for instance within 24 hours, based on a decision of the executive director, for a time-limited deployment. It could be followed by a border intervention, and subsequently a joint operation pending the amendment of the operational plan. This will allow the Agency to respond immediately to urgent and unforeseen operational needs, while ensuring gradual transition to other already existing mechanisms for operational support. The Article further clarifies that, in such situations, the monitoring of compliance with fundamental rights is to be carried out ex post as continuous on-site monitoring may not be feasible due to operational urgency or access constraints. The existing mechanism whereby Member States receive funding to support their contributions to the standing corps is being reviewed in Article 74. While the overall objective of providing flexibility and alleviating the impact on Member States remains unchanged, the revised model aims at defining a more practical and simplified system, where the payment is based on effective contributions, rather than the standing corps development, and better reflects the new architecture of the standing corps.

The Articles 75 and 76 on training have been substantially revised to reflect the Agency's significantly expanded responsibilities as a central training centre for the EBCG, notably in light of the new the European border and return reserve. Article 75 requires the Agency to set up a uniform training framework for all standing corps officers and, where relevant and requested, support the training of national officers, at both its headquarters and in cooperation with Member States' partnership academies. This comprehensive training framework includes basic training for statutory staff, pre-deployment training for all participants of operational activities, specialised and profile-specific training, including on use of relevant IT systems in return, for forced return monitors and fundamental rights monitors. Frontex must work closely with other Agenises, in particular the European Union Agency for Law Enforcement Training (CEPOL), to maximise efficiency and conduct regular scenario-based, practical training exercises, including with possible participation of candidate countries. Article 76 further clarifies the training requirements for the European border and return reserve by establishing a dedicated EIBM training curriculum, combining theoretical and practical components, to ensure that reserve staff are fully prepared for their service in the national authorities and potential deployments as category 2 or 3 officers, for border interventions or return-related tasks.

Article 77 strengthens the Agency's role in acquiring and leasing technical equipment. It allows Frontex to carry out, coordinate, and participate in joint procurement with Member States or other Union entities, including for digital, analytical and, where appropriate, AI-enabled tools, and where appropriate, to act as a contracting authority or central purchasing body The Agency's multiannual strategy will guide the development of state-of-the-art, interoperable, and resilient capabilities and address critical dependencies. A detailed implementation plan will cover procurement planning, life-cycle costs, staffing and training implications and risk mitigation. Significant acquisitions or leases must also be based on a needs and cost-benefit analysis.

Article 78 revises the technical equipment pool and clarifies co-ownership between the Agency and one or more Member States. For jointly procured equipment, the participating parties must agree in advance on registration in the pool and availability for Agency operations. The revised rules also strengthen registration and availability requirements for Union funded equipment and expand the information recorded for each asset, improving the overview and predictability of deployable capabilities.

Article 80 strengthens the Agency's role in research and innovation for border management and return, aligning its activities with the multiannual strategic policy cycle for EIBM, the capability roadmap and operational needs. The Agency may participate in and receive funding under relevant Union programmes, support pilot projects and the testing and operational uptake of new technologies, and promote coordination within the European innovation ecosystem It must also take into account critical dependencies and European strategic autonomy. The accompanying recital clarifies that the development, procurement, testing or deployment of AI systems must comply with the AI Act and other applicable Union law, including human oversight and fundamental rights safeguards. Artificial intelligence should support, not replace, accountable human decision-making.

Article 81 on the European Travel Information and Authorisation System (ETIAS) Central Unit was revised to task Frontex with supporting the Member States, upon their request, with the manual verification of different identities in the context of the interoperability regulations, and providing training to the Member States and to third countries on the detection of fraudulent documents.

Articles 82-93 enhance the Agency's external cooperation with partners by increasing the effectiveness and flexibility of the current framework and by simplifying provisions deemed obsolete or inadequate. For example, Article 82 removes the existing closed list of international organisations with which Frontex can cooperate, providing instead a list of priority partners with which the Agency may cooperate should there be an EU interest to do so. This will allow the Agency to flexibly adapt to changing needs and to cooperate with international organisations that may become increasingly important partners. Article 87 introduces the possibility for Frontex to support activities of Member States under agreements with third countries. This means that, when a Member State agrees with a third country to cooperate for instance along a shared border in accordance with the Schengen Borders Code, the Agency will be explicitly allowed to deploy teams for technical and operational assistance on both sides of the border, provided that an international agreement defining this cooperation is in place. Oftentimes, these agreements take place in contexts where bilateral cooperation is necessary or provides operational value. Despite this, at present, where such bilateral agreements are in place, Frontex is excluded by a legislative oversight that this proposal rectifies. This extends the spectrum of circumstances in which the EU, through Frontex, can support the Member States and partner third countries on the safe and effective management of the external borders. Article 88 enhances the Agency's flexibility to cooperate with third countries. In addition to the possibility of concluding broader status agreements, the provision introduces the option of more targeted status agreements with third countries, tailored to specific operational needs and geographical scopes, where a full-scale agreement is not necessary. This will help reduce the time and resources needed to negotiate such agreements and will make cooperation more focused and agile. Moreover, the Agency is also tasked with implementing Union projects in third countries in its areas of competence, with a view to avoid duplications of efforts and ensuring strategic alignment in the Union's outreach and support to third countries.

Article 90 clarifies the Agency's cooperation with third countries for the purposes of EUROSUR, reflecting third countries' interest in incorporating EUROSUR in their prospective cooperation with Frontex. Such cooperation would mean that, on the one hand, the EBCG would have access to first-hand information on the migratory situation in a given third country, and on the other, third countries would benefit from the services offered by Frontex to improve their border management. Moreover, such cooperation will ensure that the standards for information exchange in EUROSUR agreed at the EU level would be implemented by partner third countries. The greatest advantage of such cooperation is the even greater situational awareness across the globe, particularly concerning migratory flows towards the EU which will be more effectively monitored and analysed through a whole-of-route approach.

Article 91 reinforces the Commission's strategic guidance and oversight on the Agency's engagement with third countries, including by specifying the requirements for the model status agreement and working arrangement, and introducing a new framework for Frontex support to bilateral or multilateral agreements on shared border crossing points. Article 92 updates the provisions governing Frontex liaison officers, explicitly providing for the possibility to deploy liaison officers to support the Agency's – and the Union's – objectives in the area of return.

Chapter III - Document Security, Identity Management, and Visa Support

Article 94 expands and clarifies the Agency's responsibilities on the False and Authentic Documents Online (FADO) system to address identified technical and operational obstacles and provide greater clarity. To enhance the Agency's role as a centre of expertise, Member States are more clearly mandated with providing false, specimen, and authentic travel documents so that the Agency can build a more complete library of such documents. Appointed Agency staff is allowed to carry these authentic, specimen, and false documents, in order to address operational and legal obstacles encountered in the implementation of the current regulation and the transport of such documents for purposes such as training in Member States. The Agency may perform compliance checks of travel and identity documents, either upon request of the Commission or on request of a third party for a fee. Overall, the Agency is expected to play a greater role in the detection of false documents by coordinating Member States' efforts, providing regular document security training, deploying and maintaining document verification technology, and supporting partner third countries with capacity building on document fraud detection to reinforce the Union's internal security.

A new Article 95 establishes a Frontex Visa Support Office to support Member States' authorities in the implementing visa policy. This includes providing relevant training on visa policy and on the prevention of abuse, delivering risk analysis on trends, such as visa shopping, visa abuses, document fraud in relation to visas, and the prevention and detection of document fraud in relation to visa and residence permits. This new entity will offer support to Member States in areas where there is a real added value to share practices and experience at EU level such as trainings, risk analysis, fight against documentary fraud where informal cooperation already exist at EU level but should be reinforced and better structured such a support would strengthen the security dimension of EU visa policy, enhance prevention of abuse before people reach the external borders, support a more consistent implementation of visa rules by Member States. Building on the Agency's broader expertise in integrated border management, the new Visa Support Office will also improve information-sharing and communication with Member States and other stakeholders on visa-related matters.

Chapter IV - General provisions

This Chapter features several technical amendments to reflect new concepts introduced elsewhere, for example as regards return, or clarifications of existing tasks where their implementation was affected by perceived lack of clarity, such as with regard to the employment of executive powers by standing corps officers.

Section 1 defines general rules. Article 98 confirms the closure of an investigation by the fundamental rights officer when findings determine the lack of involvement of any members of the Frontex teams, while ensuring that, in case national border or coastal guards are implicated in the incident, any relevant information on the incident in question will be transmitted to the competent independent national bodies. This provision provides clarity on the relevant procedures and ensures closer involvement of the relevant national authorities in the monitoring of fundamental rights compliance at the borders of the Member State concerned.

Section 2 provides simplification and greater effectiveness on processing of personal data, without overhauling the existing framework, in particular to avoid imposing challenging implementation processes upon the Agency. Article 103 introduces standardised rules on the cooperation between the EDPS and national supervisory authorities, similar to those governing such cooperation of other Agencies. Article 104 defines more clearly and flexibly the purposes for which the Agency may process personal data by aligning them with the lists of its tasks found in Article 11. The introduction of online monitoring among the Agency's tasks, with a defined purpose in situational awareness and risk analysis, also dictates the clarification in this Article that this activity is not intended to lead to the collection or storage of any personal data. Article 105 similarly provides clarity with regards to the categories of personal data processable by the Agency. A significant amendment is made by modifying an article on processing of personal data in EUROSUR. Article 106 clarifies that the processing of personal data is foreseen within EUROSUR in clearly defined cases where it is exceptionally necessary for its purposes, rectifying existing confusion that is connected to the 'aircraft and vessel identification numbers', but also by adding two other exceptional situations: when protecting or saving lives of individuals and in case of imminent threat to the integrity of the external borders.

Two new provisions are also inserted. Article 106 concerns the restriction of data subject rights for the purpose of large-scale IT systems and their interoperability. Article 109 concerns the establishment of a new "hit/no-hit" system that will allow Europol to indirectly query a dedicated Frontex database to determine whether the Agency may be in possession of data relevant to the fulfilment of Europol's mandate. A positive hit will confirm the necessity of transmitting the relevant data, eliminating a persistent obstacle currently limiting data exchange between the two Agencies. This framework will also promote full compliance with data protection rules by ensuring that the necessity of a data transmission is clearly established before data collected for other purposes is transmitted as operational personal data to Europol.

Section 3 on the general framework and organisation of the Agency addresses certain employment conditions of the standing corps category 1 deployable staff that hinder the effectiveness of their performance during operations and have an impact on cost-efficiency. It revises the existing deployment model, based on missions, to establish, as a general rule, the place of deployment for statutory staff as their place of employment, rather than the seat of the Agency. This builds a financially more sustainable and administratively less burdensome approach. Furthermore, it aligns compensations for specific working conditions of the standing corps officers' (e.g. shift work, arduous working conditions) with the operational reality of their deployments and therefore establishes a clear system that better reflects and compensates hardship or more challenging working conditions and ensures equal conditions for deployed staff. Additionally, the proposed revisions align the initial contract of statutory staff to the length of their operational trainings, to more effectively take into account the outcome of the compulsory training.

Article 118 is amended to better reflect the existing structure of the Agency, and to require that the Agency's support functions, including independent offices, receive appropriate resources to perform their duties. The results of the evaluation of the current Regulation, as well as consultation with relevant stakeholders, have highlighted persistent deficits in the resources available to offices such as the Agency's Inspections and Controls Office or Data Protection Office, and this provision endeavours to communicate clearly the need to ensure their adequate staffing and budgeting.

Article 119 on the functions of the Management Board features several technical amendments to retain its steering and governance role across new or enhanced tasks of the Agency, concerning in particular the Agency's role in the area of return. It also clarifies a number of already-existing responsibilities of the Management Board concerning, for example, the appointment of the Agency's data protection officer and internal audit capability officer or its disciplinary authority over the Agency's management and independent offices.

This is complemented by Article 121 that reinforces the Executive Board's strategic role by enabling it to meet in different configurations to discuss matters related to budgets and accounts, EIBM, and return. To ensure that relevant experts are present in these configurations, the Regulation foresees the possibility for the designated member of the Executive Board to delegate the participation in a meeting in a particular configuration, with modalities to be determined in greater detail in a Management Board decision. This will strengthen the Agency's steering role in areas, such as return and EIBM, by ensuring the direct involvement of Member States' practitioners in in the relevant decision-making processes.

Article 129 clarifies that the monitoring of compliance with fundamental rights relates to the operational activities carried out by the staff of the Agency. It also introduces a new provision providing for the consultation of relevant national authorities in the context of investigations concerning compliance with fundamental rights. These changes bring greater clarity to the scope of monitoring activities and support a more consistent understanding of their application, while ensuring closer involvement and responsibility of national authorities in ongoing investigations.

Article 130 introduces a new mechanism to support the Agency's monitoring of compliance with fundamental rights based on a risk assessment prepared by the fundamental rights officer in coordination with the executive director. This approach enables monitoring activities to be organised in a more targeted and tailored manner, taking into account the identified risks, thereby supporting the efficient use of monitoring resources and strengthening the preventive framework that assists the Agency and Member States in ensuring compliance with fundamental rights.

Chapter V – Final provisions

Article 143 reflects the necessary transitional provisions affected by the recast of this Regulation.

A revised Annex I is introduced to reflect the capacity of the standing corps beyond 2027. The table replaces the existing yearly target model with a bi-yearly target covering the next MFF period, in order to give the Agency more flexibility, particularly given the need to implement from scratch the new European border and return reserve concept. Annex IV therefore also includes the foreseen contributions by Member State to the new European border and return reserve within the next MFF period. Annex V on the use of force also features various technical revisions to address persistent lack of clarity and incongruity in existing provisions, without overhauling the existing framework that is otherwise largely deemed effective. A correlation table is added in Annex VII.

(1) A number of amendments are to be made to Regulation (EU) 2019/1896 of the European Parliament and of the Council[23]. In the interests of clarity, that Regulation should be recast.

(2) In order to ensure legal continuity, this Regulation should preserve the legal effects of measures adopted pursuant to the repealed Regulation. In particular, the European Border and Coast Agency should continue functioning until amended, replaced or repealed in accordance with this Regulation. The management board and executive director should continue, for the remaining period of their respective term of office, continue to exercise their duties and responsibilities.

(3) Pursuant to Article 67(1), (2) and (3) of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU), the Union is to offer its citizens an area of freedom, security and justice in which the absence of internal border controls for persons is ensured, a common policy on immigration and external border control are established, and a high level of security is ensured through measures to prevent and combat cross border crime, among others. Effective border management and an effective Union return policy are mutually reinforcing and indispensable for the establishment of the area of freedom, security and justice and proper functioning of the Schengen area. Those policies, flanked by other measures, in particular as regards asylum, while ensuring the effective management of migration in full compliance with international law and Union law, including fundamental rights, should contribute to ensuring the proper functioning of the Schengen area without internal border controls and maintaining a high level of internal security within the Union.

~~The objective of Union policy in the field of external border management is to develop and implement European integrated border management at national and Union level, which is a necessary corollary to the free movement of persons within the Union and is a fundamental component of an area of freedom, security and justice. European integrated border management is central to improving migration management. The aim is to manage the crossing of the external borders efficiently and address migratory challenges and potential future threats at those borders, thereby contributing to addressing serious crime with a cross-border dimension and ensuring a high level of internal security within the Union. At the same time, it is necessary to act in full respect for fundamental rights and in a manner that safeguards the free movement of persons within the Union.~~

(4) The gradual establishment of an integrated border management is the objective of Union policy that should be pursued at national and Union level. To ensure the effective implementation of a European integrated border management ('EIBM'), and to support the implementation of the common system for returns, a European Border and Coast Guard should be established and further developed. The European Border and Coast Guard should be composed of the European Border and Coast Guard Agency ('Agency'), commonly referred to as Frontex, and the national authorities responsible for border management, including coast guards to the extent that they carry out maritime border surveillance operations and any other border control tasks, and the national authorities responsible for return. As such, the European Border and Coast Guard should rely upon the common use of information, capabilities and systems at national level and the response of the Agency at Union level.

(5) The European Border and Coast Guard should pursue the objectives set out by the TFEU by implementing the EIBM. EIBM should bring together, in a coherent framework, border control, situational awareness, risk analysis, inter-agency and third-country cooperation, return, quality-control mechanisms and solidarity measures. Its implementation should be guided by the multiannual strategic policy cycle and translated through integrated planning into operational preparedness, contingency planning and the coordinated development and deployment of human and technical capabilities. It should thereby contribute to effective management of the external borders, the proper functioning of the Schengen area without internal border controls and a high level of internal security, in full respect of Union and international law. Within that framework, the common system for returns is an essential component of EIBM and of the comprehensive approach set out in Regulation (EU) 2024/1351 of the European Parliament and of the Council[24] and Regulation (EU) 2026/2280 of the European Parliament and of the Council[25] . Border management, access to international protection and return should operate coherently and in a mutually reinforcing manner.

~~The European Agency for the Management of Operational Cooperation at the External Borders of the Member States of the European Union was established by Council Regulation (EC) No 2007/2004. Since taking up its responsibilities on 1 May 2005, it has been successful in assisting Member States with implementing the operational aspects of external border management through joint operations and rapid border interventions, risk analysis, information exchange, relations with third countries and the return of returnees.~~

(6) Within the European Border and Coast Guard, the Agency has an important role as regards the management of external borders, which encompasses border checks and border surveillance, combating cross-border crime and addressing threats of hybrid nature. It is also a crucial actor in the implementation of the Union policy regarding cooperation with third countries in the management of the external borders and return and the central entity in the implementation of the common system for returns. The European Border and Coast Guard Agency (the 'Agency'), replaces the European Agency for the Management of Operational Cooperation at the External Borders of the Member States of the European Union, which was established by Council Regulation (EC) No 2007/2004[26] and took up responsibilities on 1 May 2005. Since then, the Agency successfully assisted Member States with implementing the operational aspects of external border management and returns and other return-related activities. Following this replacement, the tasks of the European Border and Coast Guard Agency have been expanded with full continuity in all its activities and procedures.

States. The effective implementation of the common system for returns should be based on a shared responsibility between the European Border and Coast Guard Agency and the national authorities responsible for return, where the Agency should serve as the Union actor responsible for the strategic planning, prioritisation, coordination and implementation of return operations, for forced and voluntary returns, and other return-related activities, in line with the Union's migration policy priorities and based on the operational needs of the Member States. Credible and efficient return policies are an essential complement to asylum and border management, helping to reduce illegal immigration and discourage unauthorised movements, while remaining fully compliant with fundamental rights, the principle of non-refoulement, and other obligations under Union and international law.

~~However, the Union framework in the areas of external border control, return, combating cross-border crime, and asylum still needs to be further improved. To that end, and to further underpin the current and future envisaged operational efforts, the European Border and Coast Guard should be reformed by giving the Agency a stronger mandate and, in particular, by providing it with the necessary capabilities in the form of a European Border and Coast Guard standing corps (the 'standing corps'). The standing corps should gradually but swiftly reach the strategic target of having a capacity of 10000 operational staff, as set out in Annex I, with executive powers, where applicable, to effectively support Member States on the ground in their efforts to protect the external borders, to fight cross-border crime and to significantly step up the effective and sustainable return of irregular migrants. Such a capacity of 10000 operational staff represents the maximum available capacity required to effectively address existing and future operational needs for border and return operations in the Union and third countries, including a rapid reaction capacity to face future crises.~~

(9) To underpin current and future envisaged operational efforts, the European Border and Coast Guard should be provided with the necessary capabilities in the form of a European Border and Coast Guard standing corps (the 'standing corps'). The standing corps which should reach a capacity of 10 000 operational staff by the end of 2027, should be further reinforced in order to effectively step up its support to Member States in the harmonised implementation of EIBM, including the management of the external borders and return, as well as to respond to the tasks resulting from the adoption and implementation of the Pact on Migration and Asylum and of Regulation (EU) 2026/2280 creating the common system for returns. The strengthening of these capabilities should be achieved through a revised architecture of the standing corps, where, on one hand, the category 1 should increase to ensure the readiness of the Agency to support new tasks at all times, based on diversified and reinforced profiles and, on the other, a new European border and return reserve should be introduced, where the highly trained professionals partially formed by the Agency and supported by Union funds, reinforce the national capacities as regards border management and implementation of the common system for returns. The European border and return reserve should be composed of national officers who would remain at the disposal of the Member States. While these officers should already be trained by their national authorities, they would be offered an EIBM training provided by the Agency. Their training and subsequent deployment would guarantee greater integration and interoperability between the Member States and the Agency, as the reserve personnel would help to deliver on EIBM-related tasks both in the service of their national authorities and when participating in activities of the Agency by seamlessly joining category 2 or 3, as well as in emergency situations under the activation rules applicable to border interventions. The establishment and growth of the European border and return reserve would over time enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of all European Border and Coast Guard deployments, therefore maximising the impact of every officers' contribution thanks to the application of common standards, familiarity with European Border and Coast Guard and Agency tools, equipment, and systems, and greater interoperability. Under the modified architecture of the standing corps, and due to the enhanced effectiveness delivered by the gradual introduction of the European border and return reserve, the contributions of the Member States to categories 2 and 3 should remain unchanged, while category 4, already phased out as of 2025, should not be reinstated.

(10) In accordance with the policy reference framework, Member States are encouraged to fund, in their National and Regional Partnership Plans, measures aimed at achieving continuous operational readiness and the capacity to contribute national staff performing border management and return activities to the European border and return reserve. Member States can also receive targeted assistance in the form of financial incentives for each national officer who has undergone a training curriculum provided by Frontex and put at the disposal of the European border and return reserve. In that context, Member States may claim an amount of EUR 21 000 per officer trained with the payment to be made when the corresponding milestone or target is fulfilled.

~~The Commission should carry out a review of the overall number and composition of the standing corps, including the size of individual Member States' contributions thereto, as well as of its training, expertise and professionalism. (13) As the Union actor in the common system for returns, the Agency should coordinate and support the application of Union measures relating to the management of the external borders and return by reinforcing, assessing and coordinating the actions of the Member States which implement those measures, while Member States remain responsible for issuing return decisions. In particular, the Agency should strategically plan and coordinate return operations from the Member States and other return-related activities through a coordination centre, organise and carry out return operations, for both voluntary and forced returns, as well as manage and operate a Union reintegration programme. The Agency should also provide technical and operational assistance to Member States relating to all stages of the return process, including counselling, booking or arranging flights, assistance with the identification of third-country nationals and issuance of travel documents in the context of requests for readmission, organising return escorts and ground support at transit airports. When acting in the area of return, the Agency should give priority to supporting returns in the context of the border procedure referred to in Regulation (EU) 2024/1349 of the European Parliament and of the Council[28], in order to support them effectively and within the deadlines set out in that Regulation.

(16) The Agency should carry out its tasks in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity and without affecting the responsibilities of the Member States with regard to maintaining law and order and safeguarding internal security. The Agency should carry out its tasks without affecting the competence of the Member States as regards defence. Member States should be able to cooperate at operational level with other Member States or third countries at the external borders, including as regards military operations with a law enforcement purpose, to the extent that that cooperation is compatible with the actions of the Agency.

(17) Threats of a hybrid nature affecting the management of external borders comprise such phenomena as instrumentalisation of migrants and weaponisation of migration, disinformation, cyber incidents affecting border management systems or technical infrastructure, interference with infrastructure relevant to border management, and cross-border criminal activities forming part of a broader hybrid campaign, in line with the mandate of the Agency. In relation to such threats, the Agency should support the competent national authorities, within the limits of the tasks conferred on it by this Regulation, including through situational awareness, risk analysis and technical or operational assistance and, where appropriate, in cooperation with other competent authorities. This activity should not affect the competence of Member States as regards national security and defence.

(18) The instrumentalisation of migrants and weaponisation of migration by hostile state and non-state actors, on the one hand, and cross-border migrant smuggling, on the other, increasingly rely on online platforms and intermediary services to exploit and amplify vulnerabilities at the Union's external borders. Such actors may use those platforms and services to disseminate misleading information, advertise smuggling services, coordinate movements, recruit facilitators, provide logistical guidance, and rapidly adapt their methods in ways that undermine the orderly management of migration, threaten border security, and put the lives and safety of migrants at risk. The cross-border nature, speed and scale of such online activities present a challenge for the competent authorities and relevant Union bodies.

(19) In order to contribute to situational awareness, support the identification of emerging trends, and facilitate a coordinated response, the Agency should be able to monitor publicly accessible activities on intermediate service, including online platforms. Such monitoring should therefore be limited in purpose and scope and performed to help identifying online activities relevant for the management of external borders and migration towards the Union. It should enable the Agency to inform the Commission and the Council of increasing threats and to produce, complement and enrich its risk analysis products. These new tasks relating to activities on intermediary services should not involve phone searches or the collection of personal data. When carrying out such monitoring, the Agency should neither collect, store nor otherwise process, transmit or transfer personal data. Any risk analysis products containing information derived from monitoring activities on intermediary services should include only anonymised and aggregated data for statistical, risk analysis and situational awareness purposes. These activities should be carried out within the limits of the Agency's mandate.

(20) Therefore, to deliver on these tasks, within the limits of the legal basis governing its establishment, the Agency should develop a capacity to monitor the activities on online platforms. The new structure should support the analysis of patterns, methods and risks linked to the online dimension of the instrumentalisation of migrants and weaponisation of migration and of cross-border migrant smuggling, in full respect of Union and international law, including applicable rules on fundamental rights, data protection, and the competences of the Member States and other Union bodies, offices and agencies.

(21) Given its activities at the external borders, the Agency should contribute to preventing and detecting terrorism and cross-border crime, such as migrant smuggling, trafficking in human beings, document fraud, trafficking of drugs, stolen vehicles, trafficking illicit goods and firearms, identification of cross-border criminal networks where it is appropriate for it to act and where it has obtained relevant information through its activities in relation to the management of the external borders. Such activities should not affect the respective responsibilities of customs authorities and the European Union Customs Authority under Regulation (EU) 2026/2108. It should also share with the national authorities its own situational awareness and analytical outputs relevant for combating terrorism and cross-border crime, such as risk analysis, analysis of criminality in migratory flows and of open-source information pertinent to security. To ensure an effective continuum of Union-level support in the fight against cross-border crime and terrorism, the Agency should establish structured cooperation with Europol, which is the Union agency responsible for supporting and strengthening Member States' actions and their cooperation in preventing and combating serious crime and terrorism. Such cooperation should foster the timely exchange of relevant information and enhance operational synergies between the two agencies, thereby strengthening the overall effectiveness of Union action in the fight against cross-border crime, notably migrant smuggling and trafficking in human beings. The Agency should cooperate with Europol to ensure that their respective tasks and activities are complementary and to avoid duplication of efforts.

(22) The Agency, Europol, and Eurojust should cooperate in accordance with the principles of sincere cooperation and mutual trust, to ensure that they remain mutually appraised of one another's respective priorities and actions, including through the transmission of information, including personal data, where necessary and proportionate for the performance of their tasks. In that context, the establishment of a "hit/no-hit" system should provide a fast and efficient mechanism for Europol and Eurojust to determine whether the Agency holds operational personal data's relevant and necessary for the performance of their respective mandates, and on that basis, to assess the necessity of requesting the transmission of such data by the Agency in a targeted manner and in compliance with the applicable data protection legal framework. That mechanism should not in itself entail access to the underlying personal data, but should serve exclusively to verify the possible existence of such data and to enable duly justified requests where the conditions for transmission are fulfilled.

(25) Cooperation with third countries is an important element of EIBM. It should serve to promote Union standards in border management and return, to exchange information and risk analysis, and to facilitate the implementation of returns with a view to increasing their efficiency. The Agency contributes, through its cooperation with third countries under this Regulation, to an effective cooperation between third countries and the EU Member States. The Agency should play a key role in supporting third countries in the area of border management and return, including through the deployment of the standing corps where such support is requested and required to protect external borders and the effective management of the Union's migration policy. Where relevant, the Agency should also provide assistance to third countries on matters related to implementation of Union visa policy. Such cooperation may concern training and sharing expertise on risks related to abuses of short-stay and long-stay visas to the Union and in relation to residence permits, including on document fraud.

(26) As a part of the four-tier access control model, the Agency should provide support to Member States in the implementation of the common visa policy and prevention of abuses of short-stay and long-stay visas to the Union and in relation to residence permits. To that end, the Agency should establish a Visa Support Office. The Visa Support Office should provide assistance to the competent central authorities of Member States and their consulates in third countries, and to Union delegations, with the support of immigration liaison officers and liaison officers of the Agency, where relevant. It should primarily prepare, maintain and make available to the competent national authorities up-to-date risk analysis products relevant to the implementation of the EU visa policy, and more broadly the identification of fraudulent documents and material misrepresentation. It should also prepare and share ad-hoc risk analysis reports focussing on specific third countries, identifying evolving trends in document fraud for the purpose of obtaining short-stay and long-stay visas, any modus operandi leading to abuses of short-stay and long-term visas to the Union and in relation to residence permits, and visa misuse and fraudulent practices, including potential situations where a third-country national seeks entry and residence in the territory of a Member State for purposes other than those for which he or she applies to be admitted, or in which a third-country national, after having been lawfully admitted and resided, remains on the territory of a Member State beyond the period of authorised stay without a legal right to do so. Where relevant, the support of the Visa Support Office could be extended to third-country authorities, in particular for candidate countries. The Visa Support Office should be sufficiently manned to provide close to real time remote services to the competent national authorities to detect false documents. The establishment of the Visa Support Office should not lead to the involvement of the Agency in processing or issuing of individual visa applications or decisions thereon, which remains the competence of the Member States.

(27) In order to facilitate a pivotal cooperation with third countries while addressing migratory challenges along the entire migratory route, in particular in third countries of origin, transit and third countries neighbouring the Schengen area, the Agency should deploy liaison officers from its own staff to ensure the most efficient possible utilisation of its expanded role and capabilities. Since the nature and scope of cooperation with third countries should take into account their geographical location, as well as the role of that third country in effectively addressing migratory routes towards the Union, it is necessary that distinct profiles of liaison officers be established. The experts deployed as liaison officers should meet the specific requirements of one or more of these profiles, which should cover inter alia border management, returns and visa support related tasks, depending on the main area of cooperation with the third country concerned.

(28) Cooperation with neighbouring third countries, and in particular candidate countries, which for the purpose of this Regulation include third countries with whom preliminarily negotiations have been initiated in view of future opening of the accession process, without prejudice to positions of Member States on their status, should be defined by close technical and operational cooperation and the provision of reliable support by the Union, including the Agency. This support should ensure to retain a focus on strengthening border management capabilities, supporting the alignment with the Union's acquis on migration, return, and visa policy, and enhancing cooperation on readmission and return-related objectives.

(30) The effective implementation of ~~European integrated border management~~ ⌦ EIBM ⌫ by the European Border and Coast Guard should be ensured by means of a multiannual strategic policy cycle. (31) In order to ensure a coherent implementation of EIBM, national strategies for EIBM should be aligned with the multiannual strategic policy for EIBM and with the technical and operational strategy established by the Agency. Member States should therefore submit those national strategies to the Agency and to the Commission. The submission to the Agency is necessary to allow it to assess the completeness and consistency of those strategies and to support dialogue with the Member States concerned. The submission to the Commission is necessary to enable it to monitor the coherent implementation of Union policy priorities, including in view of the programming and use of relevant Union funding instruments. That assessment should not duplicate the Schengen evaluation and monitoring mechanism or the vulnerability assessment.

(32) In order to ensure coherence, predictability and timely alignment between the main planning strands of EIBM, the management board should adopt a multiannual EIBM coordination scheme. That scheme should set common timelines for the preparation, transmission, update and review of the main planning outputs provided for in this Regulation, including national strategies for EIBM, contingency plans, national capability development plans and the capability roadmap, as well as the relevant strategic and operational outputs of the Agency. It should support a coherent planning cycle at Union and national level and should take into account the strategic risk analysis, relevant findings from vulnerability assessments and the Schengen evaluation and monitoring mechanism, information available through EUROSUR and other relevant strategic, operational and analytical information, without altering the respective responsibilities of the Member States and the Agency under this Regulation. It should not replace existing planning or programming documents or create additional substantive planning obligations. Support of the Agency to neighbouring third countries in the area of vulnerability assessment may contribute to more secure external borders of the Union and better alignment of border management standards in partner third countries. Such support may foster greater cooperation between the Agency and partner third countries also in the area of risk analysis. The assistance to third countries should complement the Agency's support for Member States in the application of Union measures relating to the implementation of EIBM.

(57) Given that the Member States establish border sections, to which the Agency attributes impact levels, and that the reaction capabilities of the Member States and of the Agency should be linked to those impact levels, a fourth impact level — the critical impact level — should be established to be attributed to a border section on a temporary basis where the Schengen area is at risk and where the Agency should intervene. ⇨ However, not every 'critical' single indicative impact level of the reported event in EUROSUR would amount to a 'critical' impact level attributed in the end by the Agency to a given border section. For the purpose of mitigating these risks, and to ensure better coordination at Union level, the Commission should propose to the Council a decision that identifies the measures to be implemented by the Agency and requires the Member State concerned to cooperate with the Agency in the implementation of those measures. The implementing power to adopt such a decision should be conferred on the Council because of the potentially politically sensitive nature of the measures to be decided, which are likely to touch on national executive and enforcement powers. The Agency should then determine the actions to be taken for the practical execution of the measures indicated in the Council decision. The Agency should draw up an operational plan with the Member State concerned. The Member State concerned should facilitate the implementation of the Council decision and the operational plan by fulfilling, inter alia, its obligations as provided for in this Regulation. While the acquisition of the necessary assets could be a lengthy process, especially for large assets, the Agency's own equipment should ultimately become the backbone of the operational deployments with additional contributions by Member States to be called upon in exceptional circumstances. The Agency's equipment should be largely operated by the Agency's technical crews that are part of the standing corps. In order to ensure the effective use of the proposed financial resources, the acquisition of the necessary assets should be based on a multiannual strategy decided as early as possible by the management board. (88) In order to ensure that the European Border and Coast Guard has access to state-of-the-art, interoperable and resilient technical capabilities, the Agency should be able to acquire or lease technical equipment and, where appropriate, participate in, coordinate or carry out joint procurement procedures together with Member States or other Union institutions, bodies, offices or agencies. Where appropriate, the Agency should also be able to act as a central purchasing body, in accordance with the financial rules applicable to the Agency. Such acquisition, leasing and procurement should be guided by the capability roadmap, the Agency's multiannual strategy for technical capabilities and the relevant Union financial and procurement rules. It should also take into account life-cycle costs, interoperability, operational risks, research and innovation developments and the need to reduce critical dependencies, including dependencies on suppliers established in third countries, where relevant.

(89) In order to ensure that EIBM benefits from state-of-the-art, secure and interoperable capabilities, the Agency should monitor, support and contribute to research and innovation activities relevant for border management and return. The Agency should assist the Member States and the Commission in identifying research and innovation priorities and in supporting the preparation and implementation of relevant Union programmes. It should also be able to receive funding under, and carry out activities funded by, relevant Union programmes in the areas covered by this Regulation and, where the Commission delegates the relevant powers, implement parts of those programmes. In doing so, the Agency should contribute to the coordination of the European innovation ecosystem for border management, support the uptake and testing or evaluation of relevant technologies and systems, and take into account the need to reduce critical dependencies and support European strategic autonomy. Where the Agency develops, procures, tests or deploys artificial intelligence systems in the implementation of this Regulation, it should do so in accordance with Regulation (EU) 2024/1689 and other applicable Union law, taking account of the intended purpose and risk classification of the system. The Agency should ensure appropriate risk management, data governance, transparency, accuracy, robustness, cybersecurity, human oversight and fundamental-rights safeguards. (95) Regulation (EU) 2026/2280 establishes a common system for returns, providing the Union with a common framework to ensure that third-country national with no right to stay are effectively returned, and foresees a central coordination and operational role for the Agency. The effective implementation of the common system for returns is an essential component of a credible and comprehensive Union migration policy. The implementation of the Pact on Migration and Asylum, together with the new common rules establishes by Regulation (EU) 2026/2280 calls for stronger coordination and cooperation at Union level to ensure the effective implementation of returns across the Union. The Agency should therefore play a central role in the strategic planning, coordination and operational delivery of return-related activities, enabling Member States to pool resources and capabilities, increasing the scale and efficiency of returns and ensuring that the Union is equipped to implement effectively the common system established by Regulation (EU) 2026/2280.

(96) To enable the Agency to effectively fulfil its responsibilities within the common system for returns, it should establish a dedicated operational structure responsible for ensuring continuous situational awareness, anticipating operational needs and supporting the planning, organisation and deployment of return and reintegration activities. A Return Coordination Centre should therefore be established within the Agency. The Agency should also establish a SIRENE office to support the operation of the Return Coordination Centre by exchanging and ensuring the availability of supplementary information related to SIS alerts on return and for refusal of entry and stay in accordance with Regulations (EU) 2018/1860[42] and (EU) 2018/1861[43] of the European Parliament and of the Council.

Member States in the return process. Such assistance should include support for the pre-return, return, and post-return activities, as well as support to Member States in the collection of information, the identification of third-country nationals, the acquisition of travel documents, return and reintegration counselling, the provision of technical equipment, as well as the operational resources, interpreting services and specialised expertise.

(100) Where this Regulation refers to tasks carried out by the Agency on the basis of a return decision, or to technical and operational assistance provided on the basis of a return decision, such return decision should be understood as a return decision issued by a Member State in accordance with, and respecting the requirements of, Regulation (EU) 2026/2280, including returns ordered under Article 2(4), points (a) and (b), thereof.

(101) The Agency should maintain a pool of qualified forced-return monitors to respond to the requests of the Member States to monitor return operations on their behalf. The pool should be composed of personnel of the competent bodies of the Member States who carry out forced-return monitoring activities, fundamental rights monitors, and qualified experts from relevant entities These forced return monitors should be specifically trained to ensure that the needs of persons in situations of vulnerability are adequately met during return operations.

(102) Reintegration is an important component of the common system for returns. The Agency should therefore strengthen its role in supporting the planning and implementation of post-arrival and reintegration assistance, including through the management of a Union Reintegration Programme, with a view to ensuring coherence and coordination of reintegration assistance provided by the Member States and alignment with Union priorities in the field of return, readmission and reintegration. As a key actor in the common system for returns, the Agency should contribute to ensuring that reintegration assistance provided by the Agency and the Member States forms part of a coherent and coordinated approach. The Agency and the Member States should ensure that reintegration assistance is planned, coordinated and implemented in accordance with the framework, principles and criteria set out in Article 44(5) and (6) of Regulation (EU) 2026/2280, taking into account, where relevant, the specific needs of persons in situations of vulnerability, thereby ensuring coherence, maximising synergies and avoiding duplication of efforts. A continuum between the reintegration assistance provided by the Agency and further longer-term reintegration, including with the involvement of the communities of the returnee, should be sought, ensuring complementarity between the reintegration activities of the Agency and relevant initiatives undertaken in the framework of the Union's external action, building on existing support and fostering synergies between the activities of the Agency, the Member States and other relevant actors. The Agency, in consultation with the Commission, should identify priority third countries for the provision of reintegration assistance. In order to ensure coherence with the Union's external action, it should take into account the relevant external policy objectives.

(103) The Agency's coordinating role in the field of reintegration should concern reintegration activities linked to returns from the Union. This should be without prejudice to, where it is best placed, the Agency carrying out or supporting reintegration activities in third countries, where it is in the interest of the Union. Such activities should complement, and be conducted in synergy with, relevant initiatives undertaken in the framework of the Union's external action, including those supporting reintegration in partner countries, thereby fostering synergies, ensuring continuity of assistance and supporting a coherent approach to sustainable reintegration while avoiding duplication of effort.

(104) The effective functioning of the common system for returns requires the Agency to have the necessary information and operational capabilities to fulfil its strengthened role. Currently, there is no comprehensive Union-level operational picture of secondary movements of third-country nationals subject to return decisions or of attempts by persons subject to entry bans to enter the Union. While the Schengen Information System is the main Union-wide IT system relevant to monitoring such movements and eu-LISA can produce statistics on SIS alerts on return, the exchange of supplementary information takes place largely on a bilateral basis without being stored in the SIS central system. As a result, detailed statistics on hits on SIS alerts cannot be produced by eu-LISA or the Member States, limiting the Union's capacity to identify cross-border trends and assess developments in these areas. Information on hits on alerts on return and on alerts for refusal of entry and stay entered in SIS, together with the possibility to consult the relevant alerts associated with those hits, is necessary to provide the Return Coordination Centre with reliable and timely operational data regarding the movements of third-country nationals subject to return decisions and entry bans. This information should enable the Return Coordination Centre to identify operational trends, including secondary movements of persons subject to return decisions, assess vulnerabilities and risks on return, anticipate emerging needs and support the prioritisation, coordination and deployment of operational resources. Accordingly, the Agency should establish a SIRENE Office within the Return Coordination Centre allowing it to process supplementary information related to SIS alerts.

(110) The Agency should be enabled to support third-country authorities with occasional and ad hoc technical assistance activities. Where more structural and long-term technical cooperation is envisaged, working arrangements could be agreed with the relevant third country authorities to set out the framework for cooperation. Technical assistance may also be provided under status agreements that include technical assistance support in their scope. Technical assistance to third countries typically could include training, capacity building and support for voluntary return or reintegration that does not involve the exercise of executive powers.

(111) To ensure coherence in the Union's external action, the Agency should coordinate its activities in third countries with the Commission and the European External Action Service, including through timely consultation before launching, substantially modifying or discontinuing activities, taking account of relevant Union-funded programmes.

(112) For the deployment of the standing corps on the territory of a third country with executive powers, a status agreement should be negotiated between the Union and the third country. The scope of status agreements may be targeted to the partner third country's needs and interests. Targeted status agreements may have a geographical scope limitation or may limit themselves to a certain type of assistance, for example activities at international airports or only return assistance tasks. Status agreements may cover both border management assistance and return-related assistance, as the need may be. Status agreements may also include provisions enabling the Agency to provide technical assistance in the form of e.g. capacity building and training to lower the administrative burden and allow for both technical and operational assistance to be provided under a single cooperation tool, if appropriate and desired.

(113) The type of tasks to be performed by operational staff or other relevant staff determines whether a status agreement is necessary. Deployment of operational or other relevant Agency staff on the territory of a host third country requires the provision of adequate privileges and immunities in the host country and should be based on an international agreement of the Union with this country, such as a status agreement. A status agreement is also necessary in cases where operational assistance requiring executive powers is to be provided. The determination of whether a certain task consists of operational assistance requiring executive powers or technical assistance should be based on a case-by-case analysis performed taking into account whether it is necessary to perform tasks which entail the exercise of public authority or direct enforcement of public power which would, in a national context, be conferred by law to be exercised or enforced by a competent national authority as part of powers of a public body.

(114) In addition to the key role of the Agency in planning, organising and carrying out returns from the Union to third countries and while such return-related support to Member States should remain the Agency's priority, it should be able to provide support to return-related activities taking place in, or starting from, third countries, as part of a whole-of-route approach to migration management. Such support should contribute to preventing illegal arrivals and unauthorised movements towards the Union and to ensuring the effective implementation of the Union's return policy. The Agency should therefore be able to provide technical or operational support to third countries in areas such as capacity building, training, or returns of persons staying illegally on their territory, where this is in line with the Union's policy and priorities, as expressed, for instance, in the European Asylum and Migration Management Strategy adopted pursuant to Article 8 of Regulation (EU) 2024/1351. The implications in terms of resources and costs, as well as the legal and technical feasibility of implementing what has been agreed with the third country, should be considered before cooperation is initiated.

(115) Support to third countries in the area of return may include both technical and operational assistance. Technical assistance does not involve the exercise of executive powers. Whether such return-related assistance requires the exercise of executive powers should be determined on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the specific tasks and context of the support, the extent to which the assistance is provided under the direct authority of the public authorities of the third country, as well as the need for privileges and immunities for the Agency staff operating in the third country. The Agency could provide operational assistance to third countries involving the exercise of executive powers, provided that the Union has concluded an international agreement with the third country. Such an agreement could form an integral part of the Union's status agreement in the area of border management or be concluded separately for the area of return, provided that all elements of the model status agreement and relevant safeguards are included in that agreement. A new model status agreement should include the relevant provisions relating to return. International agreements of the Union foreseeing operational assistance to third countries in the area of return should be interpreted as status agreements for the purposes of this Regulation.

(116) Based on an international agreement, the Agency should be able to support returns from a third country, based on a return decision from a Member State, where a strategic interest of the Union is identified. The Agency should also be able to support returns from third countries on the basis of an individual obligation to leave established under their national return legislation, providing that specific safeguards are met and where there is a strategic interest of the Union that should be identified by the Commission in accordance with the Union's policy and priorities.

(117) Specific safeguards should be laid down in the international agreements with third countries on return, such as, for instance, the commitment by the third country to guarantee that the principle of non-refoulement is respected in a specific case, that the person is under an individual obligation to leave that country in accordance with national law, following a due process, and that such obligation is fulfilled at the time of return. In general, robust safeguards should be required, directly corresponding to the level of alignment with Union rules and standards. Furthermore, if force and means of constraint may be used during an operation, clear rules should be in place detailing their use in line with the principles of proportionality and necessity. Specific safeguards should also be included for persons in situations of vulnerability in return.

(118) The Agency may support Member States in their activities developed under the agreements referred to in the Schengen Borders Code, in particular as regards agreements at shared border crossing points with third countries. Such support may take the form of technical assistance as well as operational deployments with executive powers in support of Member States's border management staff deployed at the shared border crossing points. The assistance of the Agency may support entry/exit checks to enter or leave the EU, including the Entry/Exit System (EES).

~~In its conclusions of 27 March 2017, the Council stated that the management of the FADO system is outdated and that a change of its legal basis is required in order to continue meeting the requirements of justice and home affairs policies. The Council also noted that synergies could be exploited in that regard using the Agency's expertise in the area of document fraud and the work the Agency has already been carrying out in the field. It is therefore intended that the Agency take over the administration and the operational and technical management of the FADO system from the General Secretariat of the Council as soon as the European Parliament and the Council have adopted the relevant legal act on the FADO system replacing Joint Action 98/700/JHA.~~

(128) In the context of return, third-country nationals frequently do not hold any identification documents and do not cooperate as regards the establishment of their identity by withholding information or providing incorrect personal data. Given the particular policy need for expedient return procedures, it is necessary for the Agency to be able to restrict certain rights of data subjects so as to prevent the abuse of such rights from impeding the proper implementation of return procedures and the successful enforcement of return decisions by the Member States or from preventing the Agency from performing its tasks efficiently. In particular, the exercise of the right to the restriction of processing could significantly delay and obstruct the carrying out of the return operations. Furthermore, in some cases, the right of access by the third-country national could jeopardise a return operation by increasing the risk of absconding should the third-country national learn that the Agency is processing his or her data in the context of a planned return operation. The right to rectification could increase the risk that the third-country national in question will mislead the authorities by providing incorrect data. In order to enable the Agency to restrict certain rights of data subjects, it should be able to adopt internal rules on such restrictions.

However, despite the extensive efforts of the Union in cooperating with the main countries of origin of illegally staying third-country nationals subject to an obligation to return, it is not always possible to ensure that such third countries systematically comply with the obligation established by international law to readmit their own nationals. Readmission agreements concluded or being negotiated by the Union or the Member States which provide for appropriate safeguards for personal data cover a limited number of such third countries. Where such agreements do not yet exist, personal data should be transferred by the Agency for the purposes of facilitating the return operations of the Union, provided that the conditions laid down in ~~point (d) of~~ Article 50(1), point (d), of Regulation (EU) 2018/1725 are met.

(132) This Regulation should establish a complaints mechanism for the Agency in cooperation with the fundamental rights officer, to safeguard the respect for fundamental rights in all the activities of the Agency. This should be an administrative mechanism whereby the fundamental rights officer should be responsible for handling complaints received by the Agency in accordance with the right to good administration. The fundamental rights officer should review the admissibility of a complaint, register admissible complaints, forward all registered complaints to the executive director, forward complaints concerning members of the teams to the home Member State, and register the follow-up by the Agency or that Member State. The mechanism should be effective, ensuring that complaints are properly followed up. The complaints mechanism should be without ⌦ affecting ⌫ ~~prejudice to~~ access to administrative and judicial remedies and not constitute a requirement for seeking such remedies. Criminal investigations should be conducted by the Member States. In order to increase transparency and accountability, the Agency should report on the complaints mechanism in its annual report. The report should cover in particular the number of complaints it has received, the types of fundamental rights violations involved, the operations concerned and, where possible, the follow-up measures taken by the Agency and Member States. The fundamental rights officer should have access to all information concerning respect for fundamental rights in relation to all the activities of the Agency. The fundamental rights officer should be provided with the resources and staff necessary to enable him or her to effectively perform all his or her tasks in accordance with this Regulation. The staff provided to the fundamental rights officer should have the skills and seniority that correspond to the expansion of activities and powers of the Agency.

(133) The protection of fundamental rights is the responsibility of the European Border and Coast Guard. The fundamental rights officer plays an important role in promoting the respect of the fundamental rights by the Agency. To ensure that the monitoring and reporting of the respect of fundamental rights reflects the distribution of responsibilities in the common system, it is also appropriate to ensure the liaison between the Agency's fundamental rights officer and the competent national authorities. This should allow the fundamental rights officer to focus its work on the activities performed by the staff of the Agency, while liaising with the relevant national authorities by transmitting information about any incidents that may concern them.

(134) The fundamental rights officer is supported in his or her role by the fundamental rights monitors. To ensure that the monitors prioritise border sections deemed most relevant from a fundamental rights perspective, increase the agility in the deployment of fundamental rights monitors, and to ensure that the fundamental rights officer targets the resources available to him or her in an effective manner, it is appropriate to assign the fundamental rights monitors to operations based on a risk assessment.

In particular, the role of the High-Level Round Table on Returns should be reinforced to ensure proper consideration of return matters in the management board, along with the existing working groups to the management board. These should be reconstituted as specific configurations of the executive board. The executive board in its various configurations should be responsible for supporting the preparation and follow-up of strategic, administrative and budgetary decisions, evaluation of activities and EIBM. The Union budgetary procedure should be applicable as far as the Union contribution and any other subsidies chargeable to the general budget of the Union are concerned. 1. FRAMEWORK OF THE PROPOSAL/INITIATIVE

1.1. Title of the proposal/initiative

Proposal for a Regulation of the European Parliament and the Council on the European Border and Coast Guard (recast).

1.2. Policy area(s) concerned

Policy area: Home Affairs

Activity: Home affairs, migration and border management

Budget lines: European Border and Coast Guard Agency

1.3. Objective(s)

1.3.1. General objective(s)

Specific objective 2: Strengthening the EBCG's human and technical capabilities, including by improving the operational effectiveness and efficiency of the standing corps and the planning, acquisition and availability of technical equipment.

Specific objective 3: Ensure coherent design and implementation of EIBM, including management of the external borders and return, across EU Member States based on harmonised training, synergies in planning, reinforced quality control processes and increasing European Border and Coast Guards to 30 000 officers equipped with state-of-the-art equipment.

Horizontal objective 1: Ensure that the oversight mechanisms in Frontex and the EBCG remain adequate to the tasks resulting from the development and implementation of EIBM and the new legal environment set up by the implementation of the Pact on Migration and Asylum and the Return Regulation.

1.3.3. Expected result(s) and impact

Specify the effects which the proposal/initiative should have on the beneficiaries/groups targeted.

Overall impact:

The initiative concerns the revision of the Regulation (EU) 2019/1896 on the EBCG, with the objective of reinforcing the mandate, capacities, and operational effectiveness of the EBCG, including its standing corps, operational support functions, and cooperation with Member States and third countries. The proposal will generate direct and indirect benefits and has the capacity to affect the following stakeholders:

- Member States/Schengen Associated Countries (SAC) (public authorities responsible for border management and coast guard, police and other law enforcement authorities, authorities and services responsible for return, visa, migration and asylum);

- European Border and Coast Guard Agency (Frontex) and other relevant EU agencies (in particular Europol);

- Frontex Management Board;

- EU citizens and third-country nationals.

More specifically:

Direct benefits and impacts:

- Expected improvement in operational efficiency and effectiveness in border management;

- More strategic and more efficient support from Frontex to the Member States on returns, including greater capabilities;

- Broader mandate, including for returns from third countries, to further reinforce Frontex's role as the Union's central actor in the common system for returns;

- Expected improvements in cooperation with competent authorities as regards combatting cross-border crime and smuggling;

- Better implementation of the EU common visa policy by Member States, consulates and visa authorities;

- Expected improvements in preventing document fraud and other abuses through better identification of risks related to issuing of visa and verification of documents required for short and long term visas and residence permits;

- More comprehensive situational awareness encompassing also hybrid threats (which may lead to swifter decision-making and allocation of resources by the competent national authorities);

- Enhanced cooperation with third countries and international organisations as regards border management and returns;

- Strengthened standing corps composed of better trained staff with diversified profiles, with employment conditions adjusted to the specificity of the tasks;

- Improved planning and procedures to better deliver on pooling technical equipment;

- Modernised training architecture of the European Border and Coast Guards adjusted to the new tasks of the Agency.

- Maintaining a robust degree of oversight and monitoring of activities involving Frontex in view of the Agency's growth.

Indirect benefits and impacts:

- Further safeguard the effective functioning of the area of freedom, security and justice;

- Strengthened public trust in the Union's capacity to ensure the safe and effective management of the external borders and guarantee the internal security of the Union.

1.3.4. Indicators of performance

Specify the indicators for monitoring progress and achievements.

Specific Objective 1:

- Coherence of the conditions across the EU for the standing corps to support border control tasks paired with increased demand for standing corps;

- Increased number of entries and reports (single events and incidents) to EUROSUR and of national authorities accessing EUROSUR;

- Increase of the number of third countries cooperating with Frontex on border management;

- Increased number of training and capacity building activities on return delivered from the EU to third countries;

- Increased cooperation of Frontex with other Union institutions, bodies, offices and agencies as well as international organisations.

- Initiation of negotiations for either new or updated international agreements allowing return-related operational support and/or reflecting new possibilities on return;

- Increase of overall percentage of effective EU returns performed with Frontex support or coordination (year to year);

- Increase of overall percentage of returns from the EU performed as voluntary returns with Frontex support or coordination.

Specific Objective 2:

- Increased recruitment of standing corps across the EU paired with the increased use of standing corps across Member States;

- Increased availability of technical equipment for Frontex operational activities, including the Agency' own equipment and Member State equipment registered in the technical equipment pool.

Specific Objective 3:

- Increased capacity and offer in Frontex training paired with necessary and comparable set of skills of standing corps;

- Increased number of national plans consulted with Frontex paired with increased number of deficiencies in border management and returns addressed at early stage.

1.4. The proposal/initiative relates to:

☐ a new action

☐ a new action following a pilot project / preparatory action[87]

☒ the extension of an existing action

[87] As referred to in Article 58(2), point (a) or (b) of the Financial Regulation.

☐ a merger or redirection of one or more actions towards another/a new action

1.5. Grounds for the proposal/initiative

1.5.1. Requirement(s) to be met in the short or long term including a detailed timeline for roll-out of the implementation of the initiative

The implementation of the initiative envisages a strengthened role of the European Border and Coast Guard Agency in supporting Member States, including by gradually expanding its capabilities (human and technical resources), ensuring its effectiveness and the coherent implementation of EIBM, encompassing both the management of the external borders and returns as essential components. The roll-out should start upon the entry into force and application of the Regulation and will require a gradual scaling-up of resources.

Implementation will notably require: (1) the increase of Frontex capabilities, including the recruitment of new category 1 officers and the establishment of a new European border and return reserve, (2) setting up a comprehensive training framework for all categories of standing corps, including developing a training curriculum for the new reserve and having in place all infrastructure and materials required to support its development, (3) the implementation of the new elements in the Agency's multiannual acquisition strategy of technical equipment, (4) the negotiation of appropriate cooperation frameworks in the form of working arrangements, status agreements or other international agreements with partner third countries, EU entities and international organisations, (5) reinforcement of Frontex's role and tools in the area of return, with strengthened governance (6) the development of the digital solutions entrusted to Frontex under the Regulation (EU) …/… [Return Digitalisation Regulation], as well as support with training and implementation of these tools.

Indicative milestones are counted from the year of entry into application of the new Regulation, and referred to Y.

Commission:

- Y+1 and subsequent years: adoption of tertiary legislation, notably on the financial support for the contributions to the standing corps.

Frontex:

- Y+3; Y+5; Y+7: reach the set milestones for the recruitment of category 1 staff and training of the European border and return reserve;

- Y+1 and subsequent years: development and regular review of a training framework for all standing corps officers, including the European border and return reserve;

- Y to Y+7 (continuous): ensure the continuous delivery of the appropriate training to all standing corps officers, including basic, pre-deployment and specialised training;

- Y to Y+7 (continuous): implementation of the multiannual strategy for the acquisition, leasing and development of the Agency's technical equipment, together with the annual planning of the technical equipment pool through the Management Board decision on minimum numbers and the annual bilateral negotiations with Member States;

- Y to Y+7 (continuous): implementation of agreed working arrangements, status agreements as well as international agreements in the area of border management and return in the partner third countries, with the partner EU entities and international organisations for the purposes of technical assistance and operational support, as relevant;

- Y to Y+7 (continuous): implementation of the Agency's coordinating role in strategically planning of return activities, including the pooling and matching of operational needs and available resources within the common system for returns;

- Y to Y+7 (continuous): coordination and roll out of wider range of return-related support to Member States covering the entirety of return, readmission and reintegration stages;

- Y + 4: development of digital components for return case management in line with the Regulation (EU) …/… [Return Digitalisation Regulation] and support with the implementation /training in the Member States;

- Y to Y+7 (continuous): increase and optimisation of standing corps officers with a return-related profile.

Member States:

- Y+3; Y+5; Y+7: reach the set quotas for the number of national officers to be trained by Frontex and become part of the European border and return reserve;

- Y to Y+7 (continuous): align relevant Union funded acquisitions with Frontex operational needs and technical standards, register the equipment in the technical equipment pool and make it available to the Agency in accordance with Article 78(15).

1.5.2. Added value of EU involvement (it may result from different factors, e.g. coordination gains, legal certainty, greater effectiveness or complementarities). For the purposes of this section 'added value of EU involvement' is the value resulting from EU action, that is additional to the value that would have been otherwise created by Member States alone.

The challenges addressed by this proposal are inherently transnational and cannot be effectively tackled by Member States acting alone. The management of the Union's external borders is a shared European responsibility, and shortcomings in one part of the external border may have consequences for the functioning, security and integrity of the Schengen area as a whole. Geopolitical developments, pressure, hybrid threats, increasingly sophisticated criminal and smuggling networks, and the growing need for digital and operational capabilities have further highlighted the need for a coordinated Union response. Fragmented national approaches limit the effectiveness of border management, return operations and crisis preparedness, and cannot adequately address challenges that extend beyond the territory or capacities of individual Member States. Action at Union level is, therefore, both necessary and more effective.

The effective management and control of the Union's external borders is in the interest of all Member States. The abolition of internal border controls within the Schengen area means that external border management directly affects the functioning, security, and integrity of the Union as a whole. Perceived deficiencies in the management of external borders, combined with migratory challenges and security risks, have led in the past to the reintroduction of internal border controls undermining trust between Member States. Abuses of visa to the Union also place strain on that trust. All these elements underscore the need for greater resilience and coordination of current border management systems. To that end, effective European integrated border management and an effective Union return policy are mutually reinforcing and indispensable for the area of freedom, security and justice and the functioning of the Schengen area.

Furthermore, the full implementation of the Pact on Migration and Asylum[88] and the new Return Regulation[89] come at a time where the Union needs to increase the effectiveness of returns. Despite sustained efforts by Member States and Union agencies, a substantial proportion of third-country nationals subject to a return decision does not effectively return to their country of origin. The return rate, together with differences in Member State's capacities, operational practices and varying levels of cooperations with third countries, call for a stronger coordination at Union level.

The common European system for returns, established by the Return Regulation, is intended to address these long-standing challenges: reduce fragmentation of national practices, improve enforcement of return decisions and recognise them mutually, enhance cooperation on readmission and reintegration, and ensure that return procedures are carried out more efficiency and consistently across the Union, in full respect of fundamental rights. Its implementation, based on common rules, strengthened operational cooperation and a more coordinated approach among Member States, will require effective operational capacity and coordination at Union level.

In this context, while Member States remain responsible for issuing and enforcing return decisions, the ambition of the common system for returns requires a stronger Union-level operational framework, based on enhanced coordination, common planning, information exchange and the efficient mobilisation of available resources. In addition, the new procedures and tools made available to the Member States by the Pact on Migration and Asylum, and particularly the objective to swiftly process third-country nationals arriving at external borders and to return those with no right to stay in the EU through a newly established 'return border procedure', will further increase the operational demands on Member States and the need for effective strategic planning and coordination across the Union.

Against this background, the role of Frontex should be adapted and further strengthened in the area of return, so that the Agency can fulfil its potential as the central Union actor in the common system for returns. Within this framework, the Agency should have a stronger role in the strategic planning, prioritisation, coordination and implementation of return-related activities, including voluntary and forced return operations, ensuring a coherent Union approach aligned with the Union's migration policy priorities and responsive to the operational needs identified together by Frontex and Member States.

88 Communication on a New Pact on Migration and Asylum COM(2020) 609 final (23 September 2020)

89 On 16 October 2026, the Regulation establishing a common system for the return of third-country nationals staying illegally in the Union, replacing the Return Directive entered into force. The Regulation marks a major step towards a more effective, coherent and coordinated Union return policy, based on common rules, strengthened operational cooperation and a shared approach among Member States. It addresses longstanding challenges linked to fragmented national practices, improves the enforcement and mutual recognition of return decisions, enhances cooperation on readmission and reintegration, and ensures that return procedures are carried out more efficiently and consistently across the Union, in full respect of fundamental rights.

To this end, the Agency should be equipped with the capabilities needed to translate identified operational needs into coordinated action, e.g. by pooling and matching available resources and capabilities. The implementation of the Common European System for Return should be complemented by a reinforced governance structure and the external dimension should be strengthened. Close cooperation with third countries of origin and transit on return, readmission, and reintegration, can significantly facilitate effective return processes. The Union's capacity to support and coordinate such cooperation therefore contributes to the overall effectiveness of the return system. In line with the whole-of-route approach to migration management and the broader objectives of the 2026 European Asylum and Migration Management Strategy, the Agency should assume a stronger operational role in cooperation with third countries in the area of return. It is therefore proposed that Frontex should be able to carry out return-related activities in, or from, third countries where this contributes to the Union's migration objectives and policy priorities, including the organisation and coordination of return operations, cooperation on identification, and other operational return needs identified by the Agency and Member States. Operational activities involving the exercise of executive powers should, however, be conducted only when provided for in the relevant status agreements, which should establish the conditions for such cooperation, including the respective responsibilities of the parties and the necessary safeguards.

As per Article 7 of the EBCG Regulation, implementing EIBM is a shared responsibility of Member State and Frontex. In this spirit, it is necessary to take action to reinforce the capabilities of the EBCG, both in terms of human and technical resources. In particular, the involvement of the European Border and Coast Guard Agency allows for pooling of expertise and techncial assets, common risk analysis and situational awarness, interoperability of systems, and enabling the rapid deployment of personnel and equipment where needed. It also reinforces the coordination of return operations, promotes the consistent application of common standards, and enhances cooperation with third countries, thereby increasing the effectiveness of national authorities while fully respecting their operational responsibilities.

The added value of EU-level coordination has been demonstrated in practice through joint operations, border interventions, and coordinated responses to sudden migratory or security-related developments. The Agency's role in supporting return operations, training, vulnerability assessments, and cooperation with third countries has further shown that Union action enhances consistency, mutual trust, and solidarity among Member States, while contributing to the uniform application of EU law.

1.5.3. Lessons learned from similar experiences in the past

On 2 February 2024, the Commission published a report on the evaluation of the current EBCG Regulation, including a review of the Stading Corps.

The evaluation found that:

- Operational support provided by Frontex was valued by Member States and has contributed to achieving the objectives of the EBCG Regulation;

- Frontex has become an essential actor in the common EU system for return, effectively supporting Member States through all phases of the return procedures;

- Common training standards provided by Frontex contributed to improving the training of national border guards;

- Frontex contributed to improved situational awereness at external borders;

- Frontex provided added value by offering additional human resources to Member States and third countries facing migratory challenges;

- Frontex cooperation with third countries was well regarded by key stakeholders;

- Frontex effectively cooperated with other EU Agencies;

- Frontex has well established oversight structure.

At the same time, the evaluation also identified that the effectiveness of the Regulation was impacted by a number of factors:

- Uncertainties concerning the extent of Frontex's role in preventing, detecting and countering cross border crime;

- Shortfalls and capacity gaps in Frontex' mandate, its ability to cover deployment needs on returns, and gaps in the return governance;

- Lack of Frontex's own training facilities, reliance on Member States' training infrastructures and unavailability of trainers;

- Challenges for the implementation of EIBM due to divergent operational procedures across Member States and weak alignment on EIBM standards;

- Limitations in providing up to date and comprehensive situational monitoring;

- Challenges deriving from the application of the Staff Regulation to Frontex operational staff;

- Challenges linked to cooperation with other Agencies, international organisations and third countries.

Overall, the evaluation concluded that the EBCG Regulation is relevant to address the current needs and challenges at the external borders and that it provides a clear EU added value, as its objectives could not have been achieved sufficiently by Member States acting alone.

At the same time, the current framework does not allow to fully respond to the operational needs of the Member States as regards the involvement of the Agency in border management and in returns. Additionally, the new procedures and tools made available to the Member States by the Pact on Migration and Asylum, and particularly the objective to swiftly process third-country nationals arriving at external borders and to return those with no right to stay in the EU, may require additional capacity to support Member States in these areas.

The proposed measures are therefore intended to reflect the results of the 2024 evaluation of the EBCG Regulation and address obstacles in the development of Frontex capabilities (i.e. human resources and technical assets available to Frontex), ambiguities and gaps in the current mandate of Frontex as well as unused opportunities affecting the efficiency of EBCG community in border management, return, and cooperation with third countries.

1.5.4. Compatibility with the multiannual financial framework and possible synergies with other appropriate instruments

Frontex has been explicitly mentioned in the President's political guidelines (2024-2029) as a key component of the EU's border management priorities, highlighting the need to strengthen the Agency "notably to equip it with state-of-the-art technology for surveillance and situational awareness, along with its own equipment and personnel to ensure it can protect our borders in all circumstances with strong governance and the full respect of fundamental rights", and to increase "the number of European Border and Coast Guards to 30 000". Furthermore, the political guidelines refer to putting in place "new common approach on returns, with a new legislative framework to speed up and simplify the process, ensure that returns take place in a dignified manner, digitalise case management [...]" as well as the Union's aim to "continue strategic relations on migration and security with non-EU countries, especially countries of origin and transit" and the "step up our work on returns, preventing illegal immigration and fighting human smuggling".

On 16 July 2025, the Commission presented its proposal for the Multiannual Financial Framework ("MFF") for 2028-2034, with a financial envelope of EUR 11.888 billion allocated to the European Border and Coast Guard Agency.

The figures presented in the LFDS concern the human and financial resources needed for the Agency to continue to perform its current tasks, as well as to be able to implement the new measures introduced by the proposal compared to the current EBCG Regulation. The measures with the most significant impact on resources are, in particular, the strengthening of the Agency's human and technical capabilities, the enhancement of Frontex' role in return, and the scope of its foreseen cooperation with third countries.

The impact on human and financial resources is estimated as follows:

Human resources

Overall, the Agency's staff is expected to increase by 1 650 staff in the next MFF period 2028-2034.

European Border and Coast Guard standing corps category 1 staff (Frontex's own operational staff):

The standing corps category 1 are expected to reach 3 000 staff by 2027 under the current mandate. In order to strengthen the European Border and Coast Guard standing corps, this number is expected to double over time. In the next Multiannual Financial Framework period (2028-2034), 1 500 new staff will be allocated to the Agency, gradually reaching a total of 4 500 by 2034. The increase of category 1 reflects the expansion of the Agency's mandate, also in view of the needs linked to different profiles of operational staff. These include, in particular:

- A continued need to maintain a substantial proportion of border and coast guardsthat can be deployed flexibly across border checks and surveillance, including tasks to support national authorities in accordance with the Screening Regulation[90] (currently estimated at over 50% of the standing corps).

- A significant increase in the share of standing corps with return profiles (currently estimated just over 10% of the standing corps[91]) to respond to the enhanced role of the Agency as the Union actor in the common system for returns, including implementation of support to Member States for the return border procedure under

[90] Regulation (EU) 2024/1356 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 14 May 2024 introducing the screening of third-country nationals at the external borders and amending Regulations (EC) No 767/2008, (EU) 2017/2226, (EU) 2018/1240 and (EU) 2019/817

[91] Management Board Decision 8/2025 of 26 March 2025 adopting the European Border and Coast Guard standing corps annual planning for 2026 and indicative multiannual planning of profiles.

Regulation (EU) 2024/1349, the new Return Regulation, as well as returns from third countries, and the estimated increase in the share of returns supported or coordinated by Frontex.

Additionally, the following functions will be needed to ensure adequate support in performing the Agency's tasks:

- Growing needs for operational trainers, both matching the increase in category 1 staff to be trained, need to ensure uniform as well as specialised training for all categories of standing corps and the development of a new European border and return reserve,

- Needs linked to measures for supporting operations in the field from the headquarters,

- Increased support to Member States on detecting fraudulent documents and identifying visa fraud cases,

- Needs linked to increased level of cooperation and support, on border management and return, with third countries of origin and transit,

- Increased role of the Agency in strategically planning and coordinating return-related activities,

- Where the Agency operates maritime assets under its control, needs linked to the appropriately qualified crew members who can be required for their operation,

- Continued needs for the ETIAS's Central Unit staff,

- The possibility to recruit a limited number of staff to enable monitoring and support of the daily management and deployment of the standing corps.[92]

Administrative staff (headquarters):

For the period 2021-2027, the Agency's administrative staff remained stable at 1 000 while the standing corps gradually grew to reach 10 000. However, and in order to support the Agency's significant growth, the Agency will be allocated 150 additional administrative staff, therefore progressively reaching 1 150 by 2034. The overall financial cost for Frontex' administrative staff is estimated at EUR 1.057 billion.

Financial resources

- The strengthening of European Border and Coast Guard standing corps:

Overall, the maintenance and strengthening of the European Border and Coast Guard standing corps in the period of 2028-2034, including staffing costs of category 1, will amount to EUR 5.89 billion.

Under the current mandate, the European Border and Coast Guard standing corps is expected to reach 10 000 staff in 2027. In addition to Frontex's own staff, the standing corps consists of border management and return staff of Member States seconded to Frontex on a long-term basis (category 2) and deployed at Frontex on a short-term basis (category 3).

The revised mandate envisages the strengthening European Border and Coast Guards to 30 000 over time, with the following impact on the MFF 2028-2034:

- Increase of category 1 staff to 6 000 over time, reaching 4.500 by 2034;

[92] For the purposes of the costs, this is assumed at 4% of the standing corps categories 1, 2 and 3.

Some measures are proposed to address the specificities of the standing corps operational staff and improve their effectiveness and cost-efficiency:

- Category 1 officers will be engaged as contract agents for the duration of their mandatory basic training. If they succeed the training, they will be recruited as contract agent in a higher function group or as temporary agent depending on their profile;

- The place of deployment of the standing corps will not any longer be tied to the Agency's seat as a default rule and therefore administered in line with the mission system but it will be considered in most cases as their place of employment for the purposes of the Staff Regulations and the Conditions of Employment (long-term deployments in Member States). This will rationalise the system of financial allocations for standing corps category 1, making it better tailored for long-term operational service, and reducing its financial and administrative impact. The amount of savings will be dependent on the deployment/employment locations of the category 1 officers and on the relevant allowances applicable when relocating to a different place of employment. When comparing the deployment costs under the currently applicable mission system and the costs estimated under the revised approach to deployments, the average annual savings for the next MFF period are estimated at EUR 122 million[93].

- The Commission will propose that standing corps officers will be eligible for additional allowances linked to shiftwork patterns and arduous working conditions by means of delegated acts to be adopted under Articles 56a and 56c of the Staff Regulations.

Overall, the financial resources for category 1 take these changes into account, and include staffing costs, mission costs for deployment in third countries, allowances linked to arduous working conditions[94] and basic and specialised training costs, assuming that the basic training will take place in a training centre located in Warsaw.

- No increase in category 2, with its capacity remaining stable at 1.500;

Seconded staff is considered to be deployed in the different operational areas (including headquarters). The main costs will be therefore related to deployments, ensuring consistency with the rules applicable to allowances and reimbursements of the deployable statutory staff. These include relevant allowances linked to working conditions (e.g. shift work, standby duties, arduous conditions) and mission costs for deployments in third countries. Additionally, financial resources are taken into account to cover training needs.

- No increase in category 3, with its numbers remaining stable at 5.500 and a budgeted capacity of 35%[95];

The main costs of this part of the European Border and Coast Guard standing corps are related to their deployments, which are considered for a duration of up to four 93 The estimates only take into account the difference between the deployment costs for category 1 based on the current system and the revised deployment costs based on missions to third countries (subject to long-term mission reductions) and arduous allowance, not the impact on staffing costs.

94 The estimates for this allowance are based on the currently applicable cumulative ceiling between shift work and arduous work.

95 This remains in line with the current budgeted capacity.

months per year. Additionally, financial resources are taken into account to cover training needs.

- The development of a new European border and return reserve, expected to increase to 17 000 over time, reaching 6 000 by 2034.

The European border and return reserve is composed of officers coming from the EBCG national authorities, who would remain at the disposal of the Member States. They would undergo a tailored EIBM training programme provided by Frontex and would contribute to the tasks of the Agency through subsequent potential deployments in emergency situation and/or when joining categories 2 and 3 of the standing corps.

The financial resources envisaged for this reserve are training costs, under the assumption that the training will take place in a training centre in Warsaw, and deployment costs in cases of exceptional, short-term deployments. The number of the European border and return reserve is expected to gradually grow to 6 000 by 2034 as set out in the new Annex I of the EBCG Regulation proposal (capacity of the standing corps and category beyond 2027 in accordance with Article 66). The growth is estimated to be slower in the first years, allowing the Agency to build its training capabilities, with the first batch of European border and return reserve officers trained in 2030.

Financial support for the contribution to the standing corps Article 74

The contributions of Member States to the standing corps and, in line with the proposal, to the new European border and return reserve continue to be linked to a financial support system. The type of contribution under Frontex budget is linked to (1) the effective long-term secondment or short-term deployment to the standing corps and (2) a one-off support for the possible impact on the national services linked to the recruitment of new statutory staff granted unpaid leave from their national services to join the Agency, assumed at 50% of the new recruits in 2028, and gradually growing to 70% by 2034.

Technical equipment

Overall, the budget envisaged for strengthening the Agency's technical capabilities is EUR 1.886 billion.

The estimated budget covers the Agency's operational needs and assets and services assumed to be acquired, leased or chartered. This includes terrestrial assets, linked where relevant to the growth of the standing corps, the purchase of a limited number of small maritime assets (e.g. coastal patrol boats), and access to bigger maritime assets (e.g. coastal patrol vessels and offshore patrol vessels), through leasing or chartering arrangements considered as of 2030, subject to confirmation of their legal and operational feasibility, including registration, command, crewing and the exercise of border control tasks by standing corps on board[96]. The budget also covers stable aerial surveillance needs through framework contracts and investments to modernise equipment (e.g. innovative state-of-the-art equipment).

The approach envisages therefore only a limited increase of equipment that is under the Agency's effective control. For large assets, Frontex will continue to rely on [96] Any such vessel would need to be registered in a Member State and operated under arrangements ensuring compliance with the applicable maritime rules, Member State responsibility and the lawful performance of border surveillance activities.

Member States' equipment that is made available through voluntary pledging, equipment financed or co-financed with Union funding and subject to the obligations stemming from Article 78(15), and chartering options.

- The Agency's role in the area of return

Overall, the budget envisaged for the Agency's support in return activities is EUR 2.029 billion.

The proposal envisages an expanded role and new tasks for Frontex in the area of return, responding as well to the tasks assigned to Frontex in view of the Screening Regulation and the Return Border Procedure Regulation, as well as the new Return Regulation. The assumption is that the share of return operations supported by Frontex will grow in the next MFF period (2028-2034), starting with 65 000 returnees in 2028, in line with Frontex past data. While the growth is envisaged to be higher in the first years, taking into account the start of the implementation of the return border procedure and an increased uptake of Frontex support by Member States, the extent of the growth would gradually reduce over time.

Financial impacts are also expected to derive from the new measures linked to Frontex role in supporting returns from third countries, both technically and operationally. The share of this support, as well as the number of third countries concerned, is expected to gradually grow over time.

Additional costs are linked to the expansion of the EU Reintegration Programme (EURP), taking into account growing needs and a broadened geographical coverage, the setting up of a SIRENE office, and the costs associated with supporting the initiatives foreseen by Regulation (EU) …/… [Return Digitalisation Regulation], particularly for the development and maintenance of digital tools to be covered by Frontex[97].

At the same time, savings are expected due to improved coordination and increased efficiency of Frontex-managed returns (e.g. better seat-fill and pooling), as well as positive financial effects deriving from an expected increase of voluntary returns over forced ones.

- Expanded cooperation with third countries, international organisations and EU entities in the area of border management

Overall, the budget envisaged for the Agency's expanded cooperation with third countries, international organisations and EU entities is EUR 112.79 million. It does not include any form of cooperation with third countries on return matters, as this is addressed in the previous section on the Agency's role in the area of return.

To reflect the increased ambition of the role of Frontex in cooperation in the external dimension on border management, with a strong focus on cooperation with third countries of origin and transit for migration, it is assumed that the annual cost, based on Frontex past expenditure, is increased by 100%. This derives from the assumption that Frontex will support an increased number of third country partners with technical and operational support that requires adequate resources (financial, technical and human resources) for implementation.

[97] Legislative Financial and Digital Statement accompanying the proposal on the digitalisation of case management in the area of return, readmission and reintegration, amending Regulation (EU) 2018/1726, Regulation (EU) 2019/817, Regulation (EU) 2019/818 and Regulation (EU) 2018/1861 (Return Digitalisation Act).

- Continuation of the Agency's existing activities

The Agency is expected to continue to perform additional operational activities in line with the current mandate. Therefore, the remaining costs linked to the Agency's operational budget haven been considered at EUR 859.64 million. These include information and data analytics (continued operation, maintenance and necessary upgrades to EUROSUR and associated communication network, including requirements for 24/7 availability, interoperability and exchange of classified information), operation of ETIAS, strengthening of existing capacities, digitalisation and operational support, and oversight activities. These costs are based on the 2027 annual budget projected over seven years with a 2% annual inflation rate.

When summed, these amount to a global envelope of EUR 11.837 billion over the next MFF and 5.650 staff at the end of 2034, which align with the Commission legislative proposal for the 2028-2034 MFF.

The estimated impact on expenditure and staffing for 2028 and beyond is added for illustrative purposes only and does not pre-judge the next Multiannual Financial Framework. The source of financing and scope of Union financial commitment in the post-2027 period remain subject to the outcome of interinstitutional negotiations on the 2028-2034 MFF and thereafter shall be determined through the annual budgetary procedure. All appropriations and staffing allocations as of 2028 are indicative.

1.5.5. Assessment of the different available financing options, including scope for redeployment

Achieving the intended operational impact requires substantial investments in human and technical resources for the Agency to effectively continue to perform its activities and be able to act in line with the new tasks and strengthened mandate envisaged in the proposal.

The envisaged activities are expected to be covered by the budget assigned to Frontex under the Commission legislative proposal for the 2028-2034 MFF (EUR 11.88 billion).

Incoming revenue can also be considered. This includes the fee generated by the operation of the European Travel Information and Authorisation System, expected to cover costs related to ETIAS operational expenditures[98], and could include, in the course of the next MFF period (2028-2034), additional revenues from fees generated from Frontex-run services, including for instance by providing services linked to carrying out compliance checks of travel and identity documents (Article 94) and other fees to be further defined as appropriate.[99]

Additionally, it is necessary to ensure Member States' operational and capability readiness for European Integrated Border Management, including return-related capacities, in line with their responsibilities within the European Border and Coast Guard. This includes sufficient and adequately trained staff, up to standards technical and digital capacities for border checks, border surveillance, screening, EUROSUR and secure information exchange, as well as interoperable return case-management capacities.

Experience with the technical equipment pool has also shown that voluntary contributions do not always fully cover Frontex's operational needs, particularly for 98 Article 86 of Regulation (EU) 2018/1240 and Commission Delegated Regulation (EU) 2025/1411.

99 These fees could not be quantified at this stage.

maritime and aerial assets. The equipment that has been co-financed under the ISF/BMVI specific actions has provided significant operational capacity. This supports maintaining targeted Union funding linked to Frontex operational needs and technical standards, registration in the technical equipment pool and clear availability obligations.

Therefore, with a view to ensure operational readiness and the capacity to fulfil Member States' obligations to provide contributions to the European Border and Coast Guard standing corps and technical equipment pool, two additional aspects are considered under the border management funds, within the appropriations provided in the Commission proposal for the 2028-2034 MFF (EUR 15.4 billion):

- The salaries of national staff performing border management and return that would become part of the European border and return reserve may be supported under the National and Regional Partnership Plans (provided that such salaries are part of a measure that is associated to a reform or an investment in the scope of the BMV Regulation).

- The technical equipment acquired, leased or chartered by Frontex may be complemented by large scale equipment purchased by Member States under the National and Regional Partnership Plans (NRPPs). Where such equipment is financed or co-financed with Union funding with the clear objective of increasing the operational capacity of the Agency or of the European Border and Coast Guard, it should be registered in the technical equipment pool and made available to the Agency in accordance with the EBCG Regulation.

The implementation of the proposal will also entail additional activities for the Commission services, notably the Directorate-General for Migration and Home Affairs (DG HOME), in relation to governance, oversight, policy coordination and the preparation and adoption of implementing acts.

2. MANAGEMENT MEASURES

2.1. Monitoring and reporting rules

The monitoring and reporting of activities implemented by Frontex under indirect management will follow the provisions laid down in Frontex's new Regulation, the Financial Regulation[100] and in line with the Common Approach on decentralised agencies[101].

The Agency is subject to regular monitoring and reporting requirements. The Management Board of the Agency shall adopt each year a consolidated annual activity report of the Agency for the previous year and forward it by 1 July at the latest to the European Parliament, the Council, the Commission and the Court of Auditors. This report shall be made public. Every four years, the Commission shall conduct an evaluation in accordance with the evaluation criteria of the Commission guidelines to assess particularly the impact, effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency's performance and its working practices in relation to its objectives, mandate and tasks. The evaluation shall, in particular, address the possible need to modify the mandate of the Agency, and the financial implications of any such modification Frontex will submit a Single Programming Document (SPD) annually to the Commission, the European Parliament, and the Council, setting out its multiannual and annual work programmes, objectives, expected results, and performance indicators. This document is prepared taking into account the opinion of the Commission, the European Parliament and the Council. Additionally, Frontex will adopt a Consolidated Annual Activity Report (CAAR), which assesses progress against the SPD's objectives. The Management Board approves this report before it is transmitted to the Commission, the European Parliament, the Council, the Court of Auditors, and national parliaments by 1 July each year. This report shall be made public.

In line with Article 141 of the revised European Border and Coast Guard Regulation, the Commission will conduct an evaluation of the Regulation 48 months after entry into force at the latest and every four years, assessing its added value, impact, effectiveness, efficiency, and working methods. The evaluation may propose structural or operational modifications, including financial implications. The Commission submits the evaluation report together with its conclusions to the European Parliament, the Council and to the Management Board, which can issue recommendations to the Commission. The evaluation report and its conclusions are made public.

2.2. Management and control system(s)

2.2.1. Justification of the budget implementation method(s), the funding implementation mechanism(s), the payment modalities and the control strategy proposed

Indirect management

Considering that the proposal impacts the annual EU contribution to Frontex, the EU budget will be implemented via indirect management.

100 Financial regulation applicable to the general budget of the Union

101 Joint Statement on decentralised agencies.

Pursuant to the principle of sound financial management, the budget of Frontex shall be implemented in compliance with effective and efficient internal control. Frontex is therefore bound to implement an appropriate control strategy coordinated among appropriate actors involved in the control chain.

Regarding ex-post controls, Frontex, as a decentralised agency, is notably subject to:

- internal audit by the Internal Audit Service of the Commission

- annual reports by the European Court of Auditors, giving a statement of assurance as to the reliability of the annual accounts and the legality and regularity of the underlying transactions

- annual discharge granted by the European Parliament

- possible investigations conducted by OLAF to ensure, in particular, that the resources allocated to agencies are put to proper use.

- As partner DG to Frontex, DG HOME will implement its Control Strategy on decentralised agencies to ensure reliable reporting in the framework of its Annual Activity Report (AAR). While decentralised agencies have full responsibility for the implementation of their budget, DG HOME is responsible for regular payment of annual contributions established by the Budgetary Authority.

- Finally, the European Ombudsman provides a further layer of control and accountability at Frontex.

Based on the evaluation of the current legal framework, the Impact Assessment accompanying the proposal for a new European Border and Coast Guard Regulation, and the significant increase in financial and human resources expected to support the implementation of the proposal, the existing governance and control framework should be maintained to ensure the continuity of the existing robust setup, including by also allocating adequate human and financial resources to its components in a forward-looking manner in order to preserve the existing degree of financial oversight, accountability, good governance and compliance with principles of sound financial management:

- The existing internal framework for good governance (in particular the Agency's independent and control bodies) should remain unchanged, and continue to apply to all of the Agency's activities

- The entities within this framework should receive adequate human and financial resources to carry out their tasks

- The proposal provides a clearer overview of the Agency's structure including its independent and control bodies, to ensure their independence and their involvement in relevant Agency processes

2.2.2. Information concerning the risks identified and the internal control system(s) set up to mitigate them

For the budget implemented by the European Border and Coast Guard Agency, the Single Programming Document must provide information on the internal control systems, while the Consolidated Annual Activity Report (CAAR) must assess the progress against the Single Programming Documents' objectives, including as regards risk assessment. The Agency needs to ensure a continuous improvement of these systems through effective risk assessment and management processes.

Additionally, as partner DG of the European Border and Coast Guard Agency, DG HOME runs an annual risk management exercise to identify and assess potential high risks related to agencies' operations. Risks considered as critical are reported annually in DG HOME management plan and are accompanied by an action plan stating the mitigating action. In this respect, DG HOME will continue follow-up on risks concerning elevated security threats, including cyber incidents, resources and capabilities shortages which impede the fulfilment of the Agency's growing mandate and increased regulatory complexity which impacts operational delivery.

2.2.3. Estimation and justification of the cost-effectiveness of the controls (ratio between the control costs and the value of the related funds managed), and assessment of the expected levels of risk of error (at payment & at closure)

The ratio of "control costs/value of payments" is reported on by the Commission. The 2025 AAR of DG HOME reports 0.10% for this ratio in relation to Indirect Management Entrusted Entities and Decentralised Agencies, including the European Border and Coast Guard Agency.

The European Court of Auditors confirmed the legality and regularity of Frontex' annual accounts for 2024.

2.3. Measures to prevent fraud and irregularities

Within this legal framework, the Management Board of Frontex is required to adopt and regularly update an internal anti-fraud strategy. Frontex adopted an updated anti-fraud strategy 2025-2027 and its action plan on 20 November 2024. In accordance with that framework, Frontex will continue enhancing anti-fraud controls and culture, reinforce anti-corruption measures, such as control and inspections in areas vulnerable to corruption, raise awareness on negligence which may be linked to irregularities and potential fraud. It will ensure a proactive approach via controls, investigations and inspections, timely implementation of recommendations and enhance internal, external and inter-agency anti-fraud networks. Frontex will continue to participate in fraud prevention activities carried out by OLAF and report suspected fraud and financial irregularities to the Commission without delay.

The proposal also strengthens internal governance and financial oversight of the Agency, including by setting up different configurations of the executive board. This may lead to formalising the management board working group for budget and accounts currently being responsible for monitoring audit findings and ensuring follow-up of recommendations issued by audit and scrutiny bodies.

In addition, the Commission retains powers to object to Management Board decisions that may give rise to risks of financial mismanagement or non-compliance with Union law. Frontex' activities will remain subject to the applicable Union financial, audit, data protection and accountability frameworks, including oversight and investigations by OLAF, EPPO, the Court of Auditors, Internal Audit Service as well as the Agency's Internal Audit Capability.

DG HOME will continue to apply its Anti-Fraud Strategy in line with the Commission's Anti-Fraud Strategy (CAFS), which also covers decentralised agencies within its remit, including Frontex.

DG HOME needs a total of 10 FTEs to ensure the implementation of the proposal in full. In line with the stable staffing principle, the human resources required for this proposal will be covered by internal redeployment within the Commission. At this stage, of the 10 FTEs needed, DG HOME is in the position to repurpose 3 available permanent posts.[109]

The DG HOME staff required to implement the proposal (in FTEs):

	To be covered by current staff available in the Commission services	Exceptional additional staff
		To be financed under Heading 4 or Research	To be financed from BA line	To be financed from fees
Establishment	6		N/A

[109] These redeployment efforts – while fully respecting the stable staffing principle – will likely require deprioritisation of tasks within the Commission services. The Commission will revisit the needs and the scope for redeployment within the indicated number of staff, following an agreement on the next MFF.
